

Issued Weekly-By Subscription $2.50 per year. Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1904 by Frank Tousey, 24 Union Square, New York.

No. 17.

YORK, DECEMBER 2, 1904.

Price

Cents.

The Blues were barely holding their own. Suddenly Jack turned and saw Lieutenant Martin and his detachment rushing back. The foe was coming over the ridge in the rear. "They have flanked us!" he cried. "We are between two fires!"

These Books Tell You Everything!

A COMPLETE SET IS A REGULAR ENCYCLOPEDIA!

Each book consists of sixty-four pages, printed on good paper, in clear type and neatly bound in an attractive, illustrated cover, Most of the books are also profusely illustrated, and all of the subjects treated upon are explained in such a simple manner that any child can thoroughly understand them. Look over the list as classified and see if you want to know anything about the subjects mentioned.

THESE BOOKS ARE FOR SALE BY ALL NEWSDEALERS OR WILL BE SENT BY MAIL TO ANY ADDRESS FROM THIS OFFICE ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, TEN CENTS EACH, OR ANY THREE BOOKS FOR TWENTY-FIVE CENTS. POSTAGE STAMPS TAKEN THE SAME AS MONEY. Address FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, N.Y.

MESMERISM.

No. 81. HOW TO MESMERIZE.—Containing the most approved methods of mesmerism; also how to cure all kinds of diseases by animal magnetism, or, magnetic healing. By Prof. Leo Hugo Koch, A. C. S., author of "How to Hypnotize," etc.

PALMISTRY.

No. 82. HOW TO DO PALMISTRY.—Containing the most approved methods of reading the lines on the hand, together with a full explanation of their meaning. Also explaining phrenology, and the key for telling character by the bumps on the head. By Leo Hugo Koch, A. C. S. Fully illustrated.

HYPNOTISM.

No. 83. HOW TO HYPNOTIZE.—Containing valuable and instructive information regarding the science of hypnotism. Also explaining the most approved methods which are employed by the leading hypnotists of the world. By Leo Hugo Koch, A.C.S.

SPORTING.

No. 21. HOW TO HUNT AND FISH.—The most complete faunting and fishing guide ever published. It contains full inextructions about guns, hunting dogs, traps, trapping and fishing, Rogether with descriptions of game and fish.

No. 26. HOW TO ROW, SAIL AND BUILD A BOAT.—Fully Allustrated. Every boy should know how to row and sail a boat. Full instructions are given in this little book, together with incatructions on swimming and riding, companion sports to boating.

No. 47. HOW TO BREAK, RIDE AND DRIVE A HORSE.— A complete treatise on the horse. Describing the most useful horses for business, the best horses for the road; also valuable recipes for diseases peculiar to the horse.

No. 48. HOW TO BUILD AND SAIL CANOES.—A handy book for boys, containing full directions for constructing canoes and the most popular manner of sailing them. Fully illustrated.

By C. Stansfield Hicks.

FORTUNE TELLING.

No. 1. NAPOLEON'S ORACULUM AND DREAM BOOK .-Containing the great oracle of human destiny; also the true meaning of almost any kind of dreams, together with charms, ceremonies, and curious games of cards. A complete book.

No. 23. HOW TO EXPLAIN DREAMS.—Everybody dreams, from the little child to the aged man and woman. This little book gives the explanation to all kinds of dreams, together with lucky and unlucky days, and "Napoleon's Oraculum," the book of fate.

No. 28. HOW TO TELL FORTUNES.—Everyone is desirous of knowing what his future life will bring forth, whether happiness or misery, wealth or poverty. You can tell by a glance at this little book. Buy one and be convinced. Tell your own fortune. Tell the fortune of your friends.

No. 76. HOW TO TELL FORTUNES BY THE HAND .-Containing rules for telling fortunes by the aid of lines of the hand, or the secret of palmistry. Also the secret of telling future events by aid of moles, marks, scars, etc. Illustrated. By A. Anderson.

ATHLETIC.

No. 6. HOW TO BECOME AN ATHLETE.—Giving full instruction for the use of dumb bells, Indian clubs, parallel bars, horizontal bars and various other methods of developing a good, healthy muscle; containing over sixty illustrations. Every boy can become strong and healthy by following the instructions contained In this little book.

No. 10. HOW TO BOX .- The art of self-defense made easy. Containing over thirty illustrations of guards, blows, and the different positions of a good boxer. Every boy should obtain one of these useful and instructive books, as it will teach you how to box without an instructor.

No. 25. HOW TO BECOME A GYMNAST.—Containing full Instructions for all kinds of gymnastic sports and athletic exercises. Embracing thirty-five illustrations. By Professor W. Macdonald. A handy and useful book.

No. 34. HOW TO FENCE.—Containing full instruction for fencing and the use of the broadsword; also instruction in archery. Described with twenty-one practical illustrations, giving the best positions in fencing. A complete book.

TRICKS WITH CARDS.

No. 51. HOW TO DO TRICKS WITH CARDS .-- Containing explanations of the general principles of sleight-of-hand applicable to card tricks; of card tricks with ordinary cards, and not requiring sleight-of-hand; of tricks involving sleight-of-hand, or the use of taining full instructions for writing letters on almost any subject; specially prepared cards. By Professor Haffner. Illustrated.

No. 72. HOW TO DO SIXTY TRICKS WITH CARDS.-Embracing all of the latest and most deceptive card tricks, with illustrations. By A. Anderson.

No. 77. HOW TO DO FORTY TRICKS WITH CARDS .-Containing deceptive Card Tricks as performed by leading conjurors and magicians. Arranged for home amusement. Fully illustrated.

MAGIC.

No. 2. HOW TO DO TRICKS.—The great book of magic and card tricks, containing full instruction on all the leading card tricks of the day, also the most popular magical illusions as performed by our leading magicians; every boy should obtain a copy of this book, as it will both amuse and instruct.

No. 22. HOW TO DO SECOND SIGHT.—Heller's second sight explained by his former assistant, Fred Hunt, Jr. Explaining how the secret dialogues were carried on between the magician and the boy on the stage; also giving all the codes and signals. The only authentic explanation of second sight.

No. 43. HOW TO BECOME A MAGICIAN.—Containing the grandest assortment of magical illusions ever placed before the public. Also tricks with cards, incantations, etc.

No. 68. HOW TO DO CHEMICAL TRICKS.—Containing over one hundred highly amusing and instructive tricks with chemicals.

By A. Anderson. Handsomely illustrated.

No. 69. HOW TO DO SLEIGHT OF HAND.—Containing over fifty of the latest and best tricks used by magicians. Also centaining the secret of second sight. Fully illustrated. By A. Anderson. No. 70. HOW TO MAKE MAGIC TOYS.—Containing full directions for making Magic Toys and devices of many kinds. By many curious tricks with figures and the magic of numbers. By A. Anderson. Fully illustrated.

A. Anderson. Fully illustrated. No. 73. HOW TO DO TRICKS WITH NUMBERS.—Showing

No. 75. HOW TO BECOME A CONJUROR. - Containing tricks with Dominos, Dice, Cups and Balls, Hats, etc. Embracing thirty-six illustrations. By A. Anderson. No. 78. HOW TO DO THE BLACK ART.—Containing a complete description of the mysteries of Magic and Sleight of Hand, together with many wonderful experiments. By A. Anderson Illustrated.

MECHANICAL.

No. 29. HOW TO BECOME AN INVENTOR .- Every boy should know how inventions originated. This book explains them all, giving examples in electricity, hydraulics, magnetism, optics, pneumatics, mechanics, etc. The most instructive book published.

No. 56. HOW TO BECOME AN ENGINEER.—Containing full instructions how to proceed in order to become a locomotive engineer; also directions for building a model locomotive; together with a full description of everything an engineer should know.

No. 57. HOW TO MAKE MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—Full directions how to make a Banjo, Violin, Zither, Æolian Harp, Xylophone and other musical instruments; together with a brief description of nearly every musical instrument used in ancient or modern times. Profusely illustrated. By Algernon S. Fitzgerald, for twenty years bandmaster of the Royal Bengal Marines.

No. 59. HOW TO MAKE A MAGIC LANTERN.—Containing a description of the lantern, together with its history and invention. Also full directions for its use and for painting slides. Handsomely illustrated. By John Allen.

No. 71. HOW TO DO MECHANICAL TRICKS.—Containing complete instructions for performing over sixty Mechanical Tricks. By A. Anderson. Fully illustrated.

LETTER WRITING.

No. 11. HOW TO WRITE LOVE-LETTERS .- A most complete little book, containing full directions for writing love-letters, and when to use them, giving specimen letters for young and old, No. 12. HOW TO WRITE LETTERS TO LADIES.—Giving complete instructions for writing letters to ladies on all subjects; also letters of introduction, notes and requests.

No. 24. HOW TO WRITE LETTERS TO GENTLEMEN. Containing full directions for writing to gentlemen on all subjects; also giving sample letters for instruction. No. 53. HOW TO WRITE LETTERS.—A wonderful little book, telling you how to write to your sweetheart, your father, mother, sister, brother, employer; and, in fact, everybody and anybody you wish to write to. Every young man and every young lady in the land should have this book.

No. 74. HOW TO WRITE LETTERS CORRECTLY .-- Conalso rules for punctuation and composition, with specimen letters

(Continued on page 3 of cover.)

BLUE AND GRAY WEEKLY

Containing Stories of Brave Northern and Southern Boys in the Civil War

Issued Weekly—By Subscription $2.50 per year. Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1904, in the office of the Librarian of Congress, Washington, D. C., by Frank Tousey, 24 Union Square, New York.

No. 17.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 2, 1904.

Price 5 Cents.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES;

OR,

The Boys in Blue Cut Off.

By LIEUT. HARRY LEE.

CHAPTER I.

BEFORE GENERAL HALLECK.

The great battle of Shiloh had been fought, and victory had declared for the Union arms. The two great armies of the North and the South had faced each other in one of the bloodiest and most desperately fought contests of the whole Civil War.

Grant's determined stand on the side of the ravine at Pittsburg Landing, when Beauregard hurled his whole strength in divisions and regiments against him, had told the tale.

The discouraged Confederates were compelled to retreat. During two days over one hundred thousand men had fought and fought in a forest where disorganization was at times complete.

Evolutions of any considerable extent were forbidden for this reason. It was a bush fight, in half Indian style. But twenty thousand killed and wounded men were evidence of its severity.

The battle of Shiloh and its results were important in one respect.

It taught the Southern leaders what they had been slow three miles of the place.

to believe, after the cautious policy of McClellan, that the Northern troops could fight.

The star of Grant was beginning to rise. But even as it rose an event occurred which threatened to forever dim its lustre.

General Halleck, who had charge of the Department of the West, came up from St. Louis immediately on hearing of the great battle.

When he arrived on the field, his first move was to take Grant to task for the manner in which the battle of Shiloh had been fought. This, despite the fact that it was a Union victory.

History is not clear to this day as to Halleck's motive. for thus superseding a brave officer, who had proved himself at Donelson and at Shiloh. But it may be assumed that personal jealousy and dislike was as current in the days of the war as to-day in the time of peace.

However this was, Halleck now took charge of the army and its advance upon Corinth, the powerful stronghold of the Confederacy.

Halleck's plan was to advance upon Corinth by slow marches.

Every few miles a halt was called and intrenchments dug. Not until the 21st of May did his batteries arrive within three miles of the place.

In the meantime minor battles and skirmishes without number had been fought. Six weeks of a sort of guerrilla warfare furnished an abundance of thrilling incidents.

And it is during this period that the events of our story occurred.

Prominent at the battle of Shiloh and immediately under Grant's eye was a little company of youths, known as the Fairdale Blues.

They were from a small town known as Fairdale, in the State of New York.

In answer to the President's call for volunteers they had at once left school and started for the front.

After serving some time in Virginia they had asked to be sent to the West, where they joined Grant's army. Their career had been brilliant thus far.

Jack Clark, the son of Homer Clark, a well respected citizen of Fairdale, was the young captain. He was a handsome, manly fellow, brave and chivalrous, and popular with all.

His first lieutenant was Hal Martin, a schoolmate, and scarcely less popular than Jack himself. The Fairdale Blues were to a man brave and true.

They were fighting for the Union, and, as they believed, for the right. No less brave and convinced of the right were their opponents of the South. But the Blues were always triumphant.

It was but a few days after the battle of Shiloh, and the Blues were encamped not far from Pittsburg Landing, with the rest of the Army of the Tennessee.

The Union army was undergoing reorganization at the hands of General Halleck. The Blues, whose ranks were thinned in the late battle, were being recruited.

It did not take long to accomplish this, for the little company had a waiting list of youths in its own town, who at once started for the West in answer to a telegram to fill up the ranks.

So that, in less than a week, the Fairdale Blues had full ranks, and they were all ready once more for the field.

General Grant's temporary suspension had been a disappointment to Jack Clark.

The great general, whose taciturn ways were little understood, had been a quiet admirer of the Blues, and had placed implicit confidence in them.

Many an important mission he had confided to them, and never yet had he been disappointed.

"No use, Jack," said Hal Martin one day, "if Halleck continues to run this army we might as well go back to Virginia. He'll never give us a show."

"I think I'll go up and have a talk with him," said Jack, picking up his sword. "We'll get rusty lying around here in the trenches."

"Good for you, pard!" cried Hal. "Tell him to set us at something. We don't care what it is."

"I'll give him an earfull!" said Jack. "Perhaps he'll retaliate by sending us on a trip from which we will never return."

"Let us risk it!"

"All right!"

So it happened that Captain Jack Clark, of the Fairdale Blues, applied at the headquarters of General Halleck. An orderly showed him into the presence of the great commander.

As Jack entered the tent he gave a start, and for a moment was a little disconcerted.

There were others in the tent besides General Halleck. There were General McClernand, General Smith, and General Sherman. The latter had just returned from his plucky expedition in wrecking the Memphis Railroad.

Jack saluted, however, and stood his ground. General Halleck glanced at him carelessly, and asked:

"Well, what report have you?"

"None, sir!" replied Jack.

"None! What do you mean?"

"How can I have a report when my company is kept languishing in the trenches. Give us a chance! Put us out to the front, and we will very soon make a report, sir!"

Halleck whistled softly.

"Bless my stars! Do you hear that, gentlemen? What young fire-eater have we here? I'll wager you'll get all you want before we get to Memphis!"

"Nevertheless it will please me and my men greatly if you will give us something to do," said Jack.

"Oh, you want service, eh?"

"Yes, sir! We are ready for any task you may give us!"
Halleck glanced shrewdly at Jack from under his brows.
A twinkle of humor lurked in his eyes.

"Don't you draw regular rations?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very good! Haven't you got good blankets and camp equipments?"

"We have, sir!"

"Then you have no reason to find fault. What do you mean?"

Jack looked straight at the general, and replied:

"I mean this, sir! When General Grant was in command he gave us plenty to do. Whenever he wanted a band of men for scouting or to make any sort of a dangerous expedition, he always sent for us and—"

"Oh!" Halleck's brow grew dark. "General Grant did that by you, eh? You were his pets, were you? I see the point."

"That is right, Halleck," said General Sherman, "those boys did great work at Shiloh and also at Donelson."

Halleck bit his lip. He was silent for some moments. It was easy for Jack to see that his story about General Grant did not please him.

He turned to his table and picked up a map. After studying it for some moments, he turned and said:

"So you are looking for trouble, are you, you young fireeater? Well, I think I can do as well by you as Grant. Since you demand it, I'll send you on a scouting expedition."

Jack's face lit up.

"That will please me well," he cried. "Anything is better than idleness."

General Sherman laughed, and said:

"If all our boys were like this one, Halleck, we would have a great army."

"Certainly an ambitious one," said General Halleck.
"But we'll see what kind of stuff he is made of. Now, my young friend, kindly examine this map. Are you familiar with the locality between Iuka and Corinth?"

"I am, so far as the most reliable maps go," said Jack.
"That is hardly sufficient," said Halleck, curtly. "Van Dyke, I think Carlton is outside. Send him in here."

The orderly saluted and withdrew. All this while Generals Smith and Sherman had been engaged in low-toned conversation.

A moment later the orderly returned, bringing with him a small man, whose thin features and keen, ferret eyes were suitable characteristics of a scout.

Carlton the scout saluted General Halleck, who said, sharply:

"Carlton, has Beauregard established outposts on the Iuka road?"

The scout gave a start.

"There are many roads to Iuka," he said. "Which one do you mean?"

"The road between Iuka and Corinth."

"Yes," replied the scout. "He has also a line of communication with Tupelo."

"That is across the line, in Mississippi?"

"Yes, sir."

"Very good! Now I am going to send four regiments down that way to establish an outpost on the Iuka road, in case Price or Van Dorn should attempt to cross over to reinforce Beauregard. First, however, it will be necessary to skirmish or scout along that line and feel the enemy's strength. I don't want to bring on a general action or a battle. I seek only to drive back the outposts, and a hundred men are better for this purpose than a thousand. Do you understand?"

"What do you require of me?" asked the scout.

"I want you to accompany the expedition and act as guide. At no time will the four regiments which I shall send be more than a day's march behind you. This will be an expedition from which I may never hear. You may be wiped out by guerrillas or some heavier force. You will be constantly in a zone of danger and death. You will have to fight and march all the time, day and night. Ambush and traps will meet you on every hand. At any moment the enemy may envelop you, and you may never again be heard from. Does this suit you, my adventurous young friend?" And General Halleck turned to Jack with a grim smile.

CHAPTER II.

CARLTON'S STORY.

"See here, Halleck," said General Sherman, suddenly, "is this an important or necessary expedition?"

The general-in-chief frowned and made reply:

"Do you think I would suggest it if it was not?"

"By no means," replied Sherman, "but I would hesitate about sending even four regiments down into that country, for it is placing your men between two fires, as it were. Beauregard and Corinth on one hand and Price and Iuka on the other."

Halleck tapped sharply on the table with his pencil.

"My idea is to make a demonstration in that locality sufficient to puzzle Beauregard and divert his attention from our advance on his front. At the same time we will hinder Price from joining him."

Sherman knit his brows, and replied:

"An! I see! You could not have selected a braver company of boys to carry out your plans. I saw their work in the late battle, and I know what I am talking about."

"Very well," said General Halleck, with a wave of the hand. "They have asked me for the chance and I give it to them. If they are sorry hereafter it will be their own fault."

"Have no fear, General Halleck," said Jack, earnestly.
"There is no danger of anything of that sort. I will assume all responsibility."

"You understand your orders, Carlton?"

"I do, sir!" replied the scout.

"Very good! You are to accompany Captain Clark and will be under his orders until he reports to me."

"Which I hope will be soon, and that I may report with success," replied Jack.

General Sherman held out his hand.

"I wish you success, Clark," he said.

"Thank you, General Sherman."

Jack also shook hands with General McClernand; and lastly with General Halleck. Then he left the tent.

It did not take Jack long to get back to the camp of the Blues. Carlton the scout accompanied him.

Hal Martin welcomed him eagerly.

"What is it to be, Jack?" he asked.

"We are to move, and at once," replied Jack. "Let preparations be made for a long march. Call the boys out at once. Make it lively!"

It is hardly necessary to say that the Blues turned out with the greatest of haste. They were delighted with the news.

It mattered not to them if they were going into danger. It promised action and a relief from the tedium of camp.

Of course some preparation was necessary. Rations had to be procured and also cartridges. But finally all was in readiness and the Blues fell into line.

At the tap of the drum they marched out of camp. Down the company street they went at shoulder arms. They made a fine and natty appearance.

Soon they were passing the picket lines, and finally the last vidette was left behind.

Carlton the scout rode in advance with Captain Clark. The scout's course was toward the Tennessee, keeping to the east of Chewalla.

This route he had chosen as the safest, for Beauregard's outposts extended far out from Corinth, and the Blues might get entangled in the meshes of a net.

It was well for the brave little company that Carlton was with them. He was a clever scout and a born strategist.

Slowly the Blues crept on through swamp roads and thickets, until at nightfall they had reached a creek, where Carlton suggested that they encamp.

The Blues were glad to do this. As they were in the enemy's country, it was deemed unsafe to make campfires.

So they partook of cold rations. Some of the boys went bathing in the creek. Others reclined under the oaks and told stories. Some rolled themselves up in their blankets and slept.

Jack Clark and his young lieutenant, Hal Martin, however, did not as yet think of such a thing as sleep.

Jack took the precaution to post a greatly extended line of pickets. He was determined to guard against any possibility of a surprise.

Carlton, the scout, had disappeared. It was some time later that he returned. As he came into the glare of the lantern which hung at the entrance of Jack's tent, his face was seen to be ghastly white.

Blood streaked it. He gasped for breath, and then sank insensible.

Astonished, Jack and Hal sprang to his assistance. They carried him into the tent, and at once proceeded to resuscitate him.

It required some time, but liberal doses of brandy soon caused him to sit up and glare about him.

He was discovered to be wounded in several places, yet, fortunately, not seriously. As soon as he could speak, he gasped:

"I downed him! But it was a tough fight! He almost got me once!"

"What happened to you, Carlton?" asked Jack. "You are all used up!"

The scout shivered.

"I'm lucky to be here," he said. "I went out yonder to that little rise of ground to do a little reconnoitering. In the gloom I saw what I thought was a log across the path. I went to step over it, when it sprung up and grappled me. I never was in the clutches of so powerful a giant in my life."

"The log was a man!"

"Yes, and a powerful one. Neither of us let out a yell. He had me by the throat, and for a time I thought it was all over with me. But I broke his hold finally.

"He then drew his sheath knife. I got his wrist before he could use it. Once or twice he managed to wound me. I held on until every muscle in my body seemed dead, and I was strained beyond human endurance.

"We fought there in the darkness until we fell to the ground with exhaustion. I had the satisfaction of knowing that if I was exhausted, he was too. Finally we renewed the fight. Then fortune favored me. His foot slipped and the blade of the knife penetrated his throat. He was soon dead.

"For a long time I lay on the ground unable to move.

Finally, though, I recovered enough to light a match and look at the face of the man I had killed. Oh! It was awful! The man was my brother Dan!"

Both Jack and Hal gave a sharp cry.

"Your brother?" gasped Jack.

Carlton rocked to and fro in utter agony of spirit.

"Yes," he declared, "I killed my own brother. Am I not now cursed in the sight of heaven? And yet—it is a hideous retribution, for he foully wronged me!"

The scout's voice broke. Then his manhood gave way and he wept and prattled like a child.

Jack and Hal went out and left him. There was nothing they could do or say.

"A sad case," said Hal, with a shiver. "I suppose his brother belonged to the Confederate army?"

"You and I are doing the same thing, Hal," said Jack, sadly. "We are taking the lives of our brother beings."

"War is a dreadful thing."

"Yes, it is all wrong!"

Some time later, when they went back to the tent, Carlton was more composed. He welcomed them quietly. After a time he said:

"Boys, I have been through great trouble. I hope you will never have a like experience. I owe you an explanation, and if you desire, I will tell you my story."

"We shall be glad to hear it," said Jack.

The scout sat down on a camp-stool and began:

"When I was a boy my father was one of the richest planters in Alabama. I was given the best education that wealth could procure, and studied two years abroad. My brother enjoyed the same advantages. But he was larger of frame and more powerful than I. Moreover, he was a favorite with the ladies. I was diffident and not so popular.

"My father died, and the plantation was carried on by my mother. While she lived, both my brother and I lived on in the same manner as before my father died. It was then that I met Alicia Lane. She was the belle of Mobile and the most beautiful and charming young woman I ever knew.

"I fell in love with her, proposed, and was accepted. I brought her to see my mother. My brother Dan saw her and from that hour dated all our troubles.

"He at once plotted to undermine and overthrow me. So well did he succeed that a forged check for thousands was falsely charged to me. My mother turned against me and Alicia severed our engagement.

"She was soon engaged to my brother, Daniel Carlton.

I was forbidden the house, and was altogether in a very unhappy frame of mind over my wrongs. Then my mother suddenly died.

"I found our home in the possession of lawyers, who forbade me to trespass there. It transpired that my mother's will cut me off wholly. I was left alone and penniless.

"Can you wonder that I was bitter and sought my brother that I might demand my rights. He turned his back upon me. I went out into the world without a penny to start life anew. That was eighteen years ago. When the war broke out I heard from my brother, whom I heard of as having enlisted in the Southern army. I h the cause of the Union.

"But I never dreamed of meeting him as I die I never sought his life, and my soul is filled wit. though he would have murdered me if I had not kime

"I have heard that Dan was wealthy and that he rich estate near Corinth. I also heard that Alicia was deal your location with the greatest possible speed. By all means and that his daughter, who is said to be very beautiful, lives with him there. Oh! her father will not come to her! I have killed him!"

The scout broke down again in very agony of spirit.

Jack and Hal had listened with the deepest of interest to this strange tale. They knew the awful remorse of Carlton at the thought of having killed his brother, though that brother had wronged him most foully. Their sympathy was with the scout.

BETWEEN TWO FIRES.

After a time Carlton threw off his despondency and came back to himself.

"I am not going to accuse myself further," he declared. "I acted wholly in self-defense. I don't believe that Dan knew me, more than I knew him. But I must not neglect to state to you most important news!"

"News!" exclaimed Jack, quickly. "What is it?"

"We have the Confederates on both sides of us!"

The two young officers were astounded. For a few moments both Jack and Hal were startled.

"Are you sure of that?" asked Jack.

"I am!"

"On both sides of us? How do you mean, east and west?"

"No, north and south."

"Whew! We are cut off!"

"That is it, exactly. You are cut off. A heavy body of troops is encamped only two miles behind us. Before us is the right of Beauregard's line. If you go ahead they will eat you up. If you fall back it will be into the hands of a larger force."

"Then our only hope is to remain here?"

"Whew!" exclaimed Hal, "We are in a trap. We are cut off from a retreat. I see no way but to fight."

"That means annihilation," said the scout. "You cannot do it."

"How did you learn all this?" asked Jack.

"From orders and dispatches I found on my brother's person. He was carrying them for General Beauregard."

"Indeed!" exclaimed Jack. "Let me see them!"

."I certainly will."

The scout laid a packet of papers on the table. Jack and Hal quickly went over them.

They afforded a revelation. It was discovered that there was complete military communication between Corinth and Iuka.

not defeat or capture you he was obliged to withdraw and go on his way."

"The deuce!" exclaimed Jack. "Do you mean to say the coast is clear?"

"For the present—quite so. But I advise you to change way from here."

dut was upon the point of doing that when you came,"

In ack. suit fy good! I advise you to march south." profit th!" exclaimed the boy captain. "Why that would my de into the enemy's camp!" service it is the only course left you at present."

My daugithat?"

told me of agg's corps has swung around from the east, if you would up this way. I think you will be in great believing that I here." at heart. With i cried Jack. "We will get away from Il follow your directions, Carlton, and nce. Perhaps Bragg, in drawing "Postscript:-It is be has left a gap, through which Elsmere for the present.

Yankees to get below CorinGeneral Halleck as yet?" them repulsed and chased ov country. Then there will be nication we can cut, or do United South." emy's supply trains?" nee. I will promise Jack held the letter tentatively in moment.

"Mr. Carlton," he asked, "is Kitty Carlton your brother s daughter?"

"She is," replied the scout.

"And this letter is to her?"

"Yes."

"Where is this place—Elsmere?"

"It is hardly fifteen miles from here. It is my brother's plantation."

"Oh! Then I think we had better forward this letter. to its destination at the earliest moment?"

The scout shrugged his shoulders.

"As you please," he said. Then he threw himself down "That would be all right if you were never discovered." | wearily. "I must rest for a while. There is work ahead for me. We must get out of here, and at once, or all is lost."

> "So I have thought," said Jack. "But ought we to move in the dark? We might stumble into a trap."

> "I'll guide you," said the scout. "Just give me half an hour to gather new strength."

> "All right, Carlton. Come, Hal, let us go out for a while."

> The two young officers left the tent. They made their way through the camp. Most of the boys had retired to rest.

> Jack and Hal reached the picket line. They found the guard on the alert and pacing his beat.

> They passed by him, and leaving the rough roadway, they climbed a little eminence near.

outposts extended far out from Corinth, and the Blues might get entangled in the meshes of a net.

It was well for the brave little company that Carlton was with them. He was a clever scout and a born strategist.

Slowly the Blues crept on through swamp roads and thickets, until at nightfall they had reached a creek, where Carlton suggested that they encamp.

The Blues were glad to do this. As they were in enemy's country, it was deemed unsafe to make camp

So they partook of cold rations. Some of the boys bathing in the creek. Others reclined under the oak told stories. Some rolled themselves up in their blift they and slept.

Jack Clark and his young lieutenant, Hal Martid gobble ever, did not as yet think of such a thing as sleep.

Jack took the precaution to post a greatly extoner of pickets. He was determined to guard against the sibility of a surprise.

Carlton, the scout, had disappeared. I move at once."

later that he returned. As he came is lantern which hung at the entrance picket line. Suddenly was seen to be ghastly white.

Blood streaked it. He gasped render! Escape is imposinsensible. re of muskets! Surrender!"

Astonished, Jack and Halsat were spellbound. Then the carried him into the tent, a flash.

citate him. turned a handspring into a bush It required some tisf muskets smote upon the air and caused him to sit upt.

for It was the voice of the Confederate commander. But Jack and Hal had, by a miracle, escaped the shots and were flying down the hill.

They knew that it would be the worst possible sort of a catastrophe if they were captured. Straight for their own picket line they ran.

Then came the hail:

"Halt! Who goes there?"

"Friends!" cried Jack. "The countersign is, all's fair in love and war!"

The picket lowered his musket. But Jack, as he passed him, cried:

"Call out the guard! Give a general alarm! We are liable to attack!"

The picket instantly fired his gun, and as a result the alarm was given. The guard came hurrying down, but by that time the enemy were coming up in the gloom.

Shots whistled about them, and they were compelled to fall back. Jack knew well the risk they were incurring.

So his orders were to draw back as slowly as possible. By this time the whole camp of the Blues was aroused and they were coming up in line of battle to repel the invaders.

How strong the Confederate line was it was impossible to say. But Jack felt sure that it was many times their own:

But they did not know this, therefore they did not venture to advance further. A rattling fire was kept up in the darkness.

Finally, th, the scout, was now on his feet once more, and look at thded to explain what it all meant.

awful! "a detachment from Bragg's division," he said.
Both tre probably on their way to Iuka, and they have hit
"Yous by accident."

Covering us," said Jack.

"Probably they wouldn't have, if we had not gone out to that eminence to reconneiter," said Hal.

"I hardly believe that," said Carlton. "But rest assured, we will fool them. I will report later."

The scout slipped away into the gloom. He had hardly gone when the foe renewed the attack.

Fighting in the dark is by no means a pleasant task. Jack kept his men busy answering the volleys for a time. Then he hit upon a new move.

He knew that it would not do to let matters go on thus for long.

The enemy would be sure to receive reinforcements. This would be a fatal thing for the Blues. It would mean the defeat of their expedition, and no doubt their extermination or capture.

He began to draw his line back slowly. The camp had been broken and all equipments removed to a safe distance in the rear. By Jack's orders all was ready for a retreat.

The young captain remembered that there was a creek a few hundred yards in their rear.

To reach this and cross it would bring them to the base of a steep ascent. This was rocky, and afforded most admirable defence.

A small body of men could here hold a large force at bay. Jack was decided to withdraw to this point.

In the morning he would make an effort to elude the foe in the thick woods beyond. He believed that by a rapid march east he might get beyond the Confederate wing.

If he could succeed in doing this the Blues could quickly swing about again to the south and extricate themselves from their present position between two fires, as it were, and perhaps strike a blow at the enemy's line of communication. This would consummate the plan of General Halleck.

So slowly the Blues began to fall back. At this the Confederate line pressed forward, and it required another stand to force it back. But finally the creek was reached.

It was not very wide, and was quite shallow, so the boys had no trouble in wading it. Once on the other shore they had a hot fight for some while to keep the fee from crossing.

But a short while later Jack withdrew finally to the cover of the ledges and boulders, which furnished a sort of natural shelter, and most admirable for purpose of defence.

Here the Blues ensconced themselves, and it must soon have become patent to the Confederate leader that their position was impregnable, for he seemed to, all at once, abandon the attack.

The firing ceased, and the Confederate line drew back. The Blues were glad to rest on their arms until daylight came at last.

CHAPTER IV.

THE SCOUT'S RETURN.

broke, to see nothing of the foe. For some mysterious get away from here." reason they had withdrawn.

The region was clear, so far as could be seen. It was a said Jack. most astonishing fact.

"How do you account for that, captain?" asked Lieutenant Martin, as he came up. Jack shook his head.

"I cannot account for it," he said.

"They certainly cannot intend to let us escape?"

"By no means! You may be sure it is a trap of some sort, and we shall soon find it out."

"What has become of Carlton?"

"Has he not returned?"

"No!"

To the Blues it was most puzzling. They hardly knew what to do.

To remain where they were was sure to be fatal. To leave their present secure position might be to walk right into an ambuscade.

It was certainly a hard problem. Jack used his glass to his best ability, but nowhere in the region could he see a sign of the foc.

There was certainly some reason for this strange action on the part of the Confederates. Jack was wary and watchful.

He studied the situation closely, and finally arrived at a definite decision.

"If we stay here," he said, logically, "the foe will invest our position and compel us to surrender. We will take our chances and march on."

"In what direction?" asked Hal.

"We will march east to try and get around the right wing of Beauregard's army. If we succeed, we shall gain much."

"Very well. Shall I give the order?"

"Yes," said Jack, promptly. "Fall in and march down to the creek. We will follow its course toward the Tennessee."

But just then a sharp hail came from the picket below. Jack stepped forward and glanced down. He saw that sagacity of Carlton. He had never abused it, which gave him a mighty thrill.

rapidly up the ascent. At sight of the young captain he ning out to see them. saluted.

see, and I am glad to find that you stood your ground." of Jack's horse, and cried:

had yielded all would have been lost. Either we gave the he doan' want fo' to see de Yankees git whipped, an' yo's foe a beating or he is up to some strategical game, for he gwine into a trap, massa. Dat am a fac'." has vanished absolutely."

"It is not that," said the scout. "You were attacked by Carlton did the same. Corinth to-day. When their colonel found that he could you mean that?"

not defeat or capture you he was obliged to withdraw and go on his way."

"The deuce!" exclaimed Jack. "Do you mean to say the coast is clear?"

"For the present—quite so. But I advise you to change Jack Clark was quite astonished, when the light of day your location with the greatest possible speed. By all means

"I was upon the point of doing that when you came,"

"Very good! I advise you to march south."

"South!" exclaimed the boy captain. "Why that would be right into the enemy's camp!"

"Well, it is the only course left you at present."

"How is that?"

"Well, Bragg's corps has swung around from the east, and is coming up this way. I think you will be in great danger to remain here."

"That settles it!" cried Jack. "We will get away from here at once. I shall follow your directions, Carlton, and march south."

"It is your only chance. Perhaps Bragg, in drawing from that part of the line, has left a gap, through which you can slip."

"I can send no dispatch to General Halleck as yet?"

"Not with safety."

"Is there any line of communication we can cut, or do we stand a show of coming upon the enemy's supply trains?"

"Yes, I think there is a very good chance. I will promise you plenty of chance for raiding."

"All right!" cried Jack, with renewed spirits. "Forward, Blues! Will you lead the way, scout?"

"I will."

Jack and Carlton at once mounted horses and started away in advance of the little column of Blues. They crossed the creek and marched back over the land they had retreated across a few hours before.

Not more than a mile away, and right in their course. was a little range of hills. The highway led through them, The scout assured Jack that these hills were not held by the Confederates.

"If you can get beyond them," he said, "you'll see the Confederates' lines over to the west toward Corinth. We will not go in that direction, we will keep going south."

Jack had learned to place implicit confidence in the

On marched the Blues. They passed a little collection of Carlton, the scout, was just passing the guard. He came negro cabins, and the entire colored population came run-

The coons clapped their hands and sang plantation songs. "Ah, Captain Clark," he cried, "I am back safely, as you One of them, a gray-haired man, came up to the stirrups

"There was no other hope for us," replied Jack. "If we | "Massa, I done want fo' to gib yo' warnin'. Ole Mose

Jack was startled and impressed. He pulled rein, and a detachment which was under special orders to report at "What is that, uncle?" cried the young captain. "Do gwine de wrong way !"

Jack looked at the scout, and Carlton showed his surprise. He reined his horse nearer the negro, and asked:

"What do you mean, uncle? Where is the danger?"

"Ober dar, sir, in dem hills. It's de guerrillas. Marse Manton, he am at de dead ob dem. Dey is all froo dem hills, sah! I done tole yo' dat fo' suah, sah!"

"Humph!" said Carlton, as he turned to Jack. "I don't know whether to believe the old fellow or not. These darkies are not always reliable."

"It would be foolish for us to ride into a trap. How not a fine looking brute. But the prisoner—" large a force has Manton got?"

"I don't know. I hardly believe it is over four or five hundred men."

"That outnumbers us."

"Oh, yes! We must not risk an encounter with them, if possible. Perhaps we had better send scouts ahead and make sure that the coast is clear."

Jack thanked the aged negro and gave him some silver allegiance to the Confederacy." coin. Then the Blues went on.

But, as Carlton suggested, videttes were sent ahead. No sign of the foe, however, could be seen.

"It would not surprise me, though, if Manton and his men were lurking in this vicinity," said Carlton. "He is recruiting just now, prior to a raid upon the Union outposts."

"I'd like to give him a setback," said Jack, with flashing eyes. "Military men I have a respect for, though they may be my enemies, but I abhor a guerrilla."

"So do I," agreed Carlton. "And, as this fellow Manton is the man selected by my brother for his daughter's husband. I have much curiosity to see him."

The Blues were now approaching the little range of hills. The highway led into a little cut, which was shaded by great trees.

The hour was yet early. As the little company marched on, it was with the most extreme of caution.

Presently, though, they began to ascend the cut in the hills. They had not gone far when a vidette came riding back in much excitement.

"Captain Clark," he cried, "I think the enemy is ahead of us and encamped beside the road. I saw armed men federacy. No charge against my honor can be sustained." and horses."

At once a halt was called. Jack quickly arranged to leave Hal Martin in command. The Blues were deployed in the timber on either side of the highway. Anyone passing could not see them.

Then Jack and Carlton dismounted and went on up the road on foot. The young captain was anxious, if possible, to locate the foe.

Nearer they drew to the spot described by the vidette. And now they came to a halt. As the vidette had declared, armed men held the road beyond.

From their appearance Jack deduced that they were guerrillas. That they were Manton's men it seemed as if there him a traitor. They believed it. puld be little doubt.

But as Jack and the scout continued to watch they saw of breath.

"I means ebery word I says, massa! It am a fac'. Yo's a cavalcade of men come down the road. They were given a start when they observed that in their midst rode a prisoner.

> "They've caught some poor chap," whispered Carlton. "Now that's too bad. Let us keep a watch on them."

"We must rescue him!"

"Let us find out first if it is possible."

They proceeded to draw nearer in the shadow of the trees. They saw at the head of the cavalcade a man of powerful build, with square jaw and deep-set eyes. He wore a prodigiously large mustache.

"That is Manton himself," whispered Carlton. "Is he Carlton gave a start. Jack did the same. Their surprise was intense.

The prisoner wore a handsome uniform of gray. He was a young Confederate lieutenant. His face was clear and handsome, his bearing proud and brave.

"What does it mean?" whispered Carlton. "Dare Manton make a prisoner of a Confederate officer? He professes

"It is very strange!"

The two men drew nearer. Beside the road was a small cut in the side of the hill. It formed a sort of little pocket, with tree-crowned heights about it.

In this place were gathered several hundred of the guerrillas. Campfires blazed, and horses were tethered to the trees.

It was plainly a temporary camping place for the troop. Now, as Manton and his party rode in, all sprang up, and when quick orders rang out, they formed three sides of a hollow square.

Into this place rode Manton and his prisoner. The guerrilla chief dismounted and threw his bridle to one of the gang.

The prisoner's hands were bound behind him, and he could not help himself, but a couple of the band quickly and roughly pulled him out of the saddle.

"Stand him out here," roared the guerrilla chief. "Take a look at him, boys! He's a traitor to the Confederacy!"

The prisoner stood with proud, erect mien and flashing eves among his foes.

"That is a lie," he said, hotly. "I am loyal to the Con-At this Manton burst into a roar of ironical laughter.

CHAPTER

THE GUERRILLA'S PRISONER.

"You see, boys," shouted the guerrilla chief, "he gives us the lie! He denies that he is a traitor!"

An ominous growl went up from the company of rough men. It was enough for them that their chief had declared

For the prisoner to plead his case would be an idle waste

Jack saw this. It made his blood boil. He understood the whole villainous game. He knew the young Confederate lieutenant would have no show.

In some way he had incurred Manton's enmity. would pay the penalty, and that would be death.

"Do you know him?" whispered Jack.

"No," replied Carlton, "I am trying to guess who he is." Just then the guerrilla leader advanced and shouted:

"William Opdyke, you are adjudged a traitor to the Confederacy. What have you to say in your defence?"

Carlton gave a great start and placed a hand on Jack's arm.

"Did you hear that?" he whispered. "It is young Opdyke, the youth whom my brother declared that Kitty should not marry."

Jack Clark was astonished. He rubbed his eyes to make sure that they did not deceive him.

"Is it possible that a man could choose Manton in preference to this young man who it is plain has the daughter's love?"

"You saw my brother's letter?"

"Yes."

"God alone shall judge him," said Carlton, with a deep sigh. "He foully wronged me, and now he would have done his own daughter as great a wrong."

"But-do you believe Manton will dare to kill him?"

"Will he dare? It is his game. If Opdyke is out of the way, he is ignorant enough to believe that his own suit would be successful."

"The dark scoundrel!"

"That is just what he is!"

"Carlton, we must do something to prevent this horrible deed."

"I wish we could, but I see no way. They outnumber us four to one. Only a bit of strategy would save him, and I fear they intend to hang him at once."

"Do you believe it?"

"It looks like it."

The prisoner had straightened up, and his gaze flashed over the assemblage of rough men.

"Aré there any hearts hère true to the Confèderacy?" he demanded, in a ringing voice, "or are you all raiders and plunderers, with no sentiment of honor or fair play? If so, I can ask nothing of you. Otherwise you will yield me a fair trial, and that will prove my innocence."

Manton rubbed his sides and laughed boisterously.

"Will you listen, comrades?" he shouted. "He calls us all raiders and plunderers and devoid of honor! Oh, yes! so we are, of the kind of honor of which he boasts! Haw, haw, haw!"

'A roar went up from the guerrilla band. It boded no day." good for the prisoner.

his gaze upon the tree-crowned heights like one resigned to had been waiting anxiously. an unavoidable fate.

"Well, speak up again! Let us hear more," snarled tened with interest. Manton. "Have you no better plea to make? Speak up, if | "Quite a romance," said Hal Martin. "It sound you would save your neck!"

"I have decided that it is useless to appeal to such a tribunal," answered the young prisoner. "My fate is in your hands, and you can do with me as you will. But I will be avenged."

"Oh, you will, eh?" gritted Manton. "Poor satisfaction to a, dead man. And what of her? Shall I tell you that she will be mine—all mine?"

"Never!" cried the prisoner, with quick impetuosity. "You fiend! She will never meet with such a fate."

"Oh, she will not, eh?" persisted the guerrilla chief. "I am tempted to let you live to see it, and then let you die the easier for it. Bah! Your race is run! You are nothing!"

Deliberately, Manton stepped up and spat in the prisoner's face. It was a filthy outrage, an insult to stir the whole being of the helpless man.

And, as if it seemed to yield him the power of a giant, Opdyke gave one wrench and freed his arms. The cords snapped, and with a triumphant cry he hurled himself upon his foe like a tiger.

He dealt Manton a terrific blow in the face, which knocked him bleeding to the ground. But before he could do more a dozen arms seized him, he was crushed to the ground and again bound.

Jack and Carlton had started up, quite forgetting the danger of exposure. Their whole sympathies were to Opdyke, and they longed to go to his aid.

But it was impossible. Manton crawled to his feet savage as a tiger. For one moment he glowered at the prison r and seemed about to jump upon him.

But he restrained himself. Wiping the blood from his face, he gritted:

"Wait! I'll not kill you yet, for I want you to suffer the tortures of the infernal before you die! I will make you beg for mercy, beg for death! Bind him well! Take him away and see that he does not escape!"

Jack drew back with a deep breath.

"Come, Carlton," he whispered, "there is a chance. We must not remain here. Let us go back."

"There is a chance now that he has decided not to kill him at once," said the scout. "But-will you do no a favor?"

"What?"

"Co lak to your company. Kop then well in land. Don't attack this gang yet. Leave me here! I will report later."

Jack hesitated. But he finally said:

"Very well! I wish I could stay with you."

"It is better not to. I will hope to see you later in the

The scout glided away. Jack crept back through the He seemed to see it, for his manner relaxed, and he fixed trees until, after a time, he had rejoined his boys. They

As briefly as possible he gave them the story. All li-page out of a story-book."

Peters.

The second lieutenant, Walter Gray, voiced the same sentiment. All the Blues, even down to little Teddy Scott, the drummer boy, were in deep sympathy with young Opdyke. Jack was now undecided what to do. He would much i have liked to attack the guerrillas.

But he knew that this would hardly do as yet. The chances of a defeat were by far too strong. It was safer to wait and watch.

"I don't see how he dares to hang that young officer," said Hal Martin. "If he is a spy or a traitor he should refer him to General Beauregard. He has no right to order his execution."

"Ah," said Jack, "men of Manton's lawless stamp dare do anything. He will never report the matter."

Just then a startling thing occurred. The crack of a musket smote upon the noonday air.

The picket came in hastily. At once the Blues sprang to arms and deployed. Other shots now came through the trees.

street linestlering, The street Correct to the continue of the Year and the contract of the c Jeest. With a reserved to the commenced re el l'en l'un an en en en l'infaction War ont.

in mselves. They were bush fighters and, like Indians, not given to fighting in the open.

ii! I have a citting. They proved due hold their tall any ale Circullate shilling

The battle waged hot, and Jack soon found that he must I. lik k to prevent being out-flanked. A number of his had been killed, and the young captain felt that his ion was growing desperate.

if t presently the Blues reached the summit of a lade. Harrie, four Indian, and they lapt up so het a free that the promitty retired.

that this was it case. They had been really online. To: T.

A det anie de la brite ice would have corried their prinion and wall dath in an . But to charge was a let's rei knamme garmillas.

It was as much a matter of surprise why the guerrillas le lenly quit the conflict as why the regular Confedernice will be had done so the night before. But an explana- Hence they were recognized. tion con more lucid was quickly gained.

wide l'onches.

Corporal T in Peter- wished his life to din's this and son of Manton. take a view of the country. What he discovered was santling.

Up the Carinth real three ver marching a full rese n. nt of Confed rate soldiers. They were con in the therein the cut in the bill.

It was easy most to under find why the garribas had

"I hope the young fellow is rescued," said Corporal Tom | chosen to quit the scene. They had no desire to meet with regular troops.

> "Well," said Jack, with a deep breath, "what do you think of that, Hal? Don't we have luck in getting out of hard scrapes? It looks to me as if all that we need to do is to remain right here and let the enemy pass."

"Will you do that?"

"Why not?"

"After they pass the guerrillas may come back, and they can locate us."

Jack saw the point.

"You are right, Hal! It will be better for us to get out of this. But where shall we go?"

"There seems to be but one direction for us to take."

"Which?"

"South, or keep right on this highway through the hills."

"We shall be a sort of advance guard for the foe in our rear."

"Well, I see no other plan. We certainly can't stay here. We can't go back and meet them. We must go ahead."

"There are many worse things than going ahead," said Jack. "Fall in, boys, and we will march out of this place. Send out videttes front and rear."

The order was obeyed. As they marched past the cut in the hills where the guerrillas had lately been encamped no sign of them was to be seen.

Where they had gone the Blues did not know. It was The guerrilla style of fighting was of a type peculiar to enough for them that the guerrillas now dared not attack them.

They pressed on rapidly, and in less than an hour Since their experience at Shill in Burn alt prouds emerged from the hills and saw an open country before them. It was a region to be torn with shot and shell before many days.

CHAPTER VI.

AT THE PLANTATION.

. Manton dared not continue the attack on the Blues for It was matter of deep congratulation with the Blues many reasons. One most patent one was that he feared meeting the regular troops.

> He was practically an outlaw himself. While neither side recognized guerrilla warfare, yet they did not interfere with it.

Mosby, Forrest, and other cavalry generals, were really guerrillas, but they were not of so lawless a type as Manton.

So, to avoid trouble, Manton had moved on. On the cuince of the ledge a fall tree product of this, for the Confederate colonel of the regulars wald crainly have inquired in on the riber and contains

> So the lawless guerrilla chief hustled back to his horses and mounted and rode away. Once again the Blues were lectricated from a prescrioa-position by a led a chance,

But they know that it was the artification of the statement grand of the regulars in their marks ears up with them.

They pasted on at double spilek. It was not bong become they saw the fertile fields and substantial buildings of a plantation.

The Blues were out of rations, and hunger was beginning to oppress them. Jack saw that here might be a chance to heard of, Miss-Carlton, is it not?" said Jack, lifting his secure food.

He had no thought of raiding the place. He would pay for what they required if it could be obtained.

The Blues halted at the entrance to the plantation grounds. Jack galloped quickly down the lane and into the yard.

He met a man whose dress and appearance indicated that he was the overseer. Jack saluted him.

"Are you the owner of this plantation?" he asked.

The fellow rubbed his eyes.

"No, I ain't," he replied. "I'm ther man in charge. But bless my stars, Yank, what are you doin' away down here?"

"Taking a look at the country."

"Oh, is that so? Wall, ye may find it resky afore ye git through."

."Why?"

"Don't ye know why? Thar's troops all around ye, Beauregard's headquarters is only just over that to Corinth. If he ever got his flippers onto ye it's good-bye for ye."

"All right," said Jack, earelessly, "I'm taking chances. But tell me, my man, can you furnish me with rations for my men?"

The plantation overseer looked dubious.

"We're Confederates," he said. "We ain't supposed to furnish food to the Yanks."

"Isn't Uncle Sam's gold as good as anybody's money?" "Oh, yas!"

"Very good! I have plenty of it with me. Now some of it is yours if you want to do business."

The fellow hesitated no longer.

"You bet we'll do bizness," he cried. "We ain't so narrow as that. Ye can buy anything ye want at Elsmere." "Elsmere!" gasped Jack.

"Yas, this is the place."

The boy captain felt a queer chill. This was the famous Elsmere plantation. Neither overseer nor anyone else knew that its owner and master was lying in death under the shrubbery in the woods above, the victim of his brother's superior strength. 'But this was true.

Jack recalled the story of Scout Carlton, and it gave him a queer thrill. Certainly it was all very gruesome to think of.

But just at that moment the clatter of hoofs was heard, and up to the spot dashed a handsome thoroughbred. On its back was a young woman, and Jack gave a start at sight of her.

In all his life he had never seen greater feminine beauty. She was rather slender in figure, and graceful beyond compare, and her wondrous eves were fixed upon him. Their er project hald be entarily for a case pic

"White Cir. I. out of the this better is the profitionalist without of the first of the first

"Oh, no, Miss Kitty," replied the overseer, who hastened to assist her to dismount, "I don't think they have."

cap.

The Southern girl's color heightened a little. But'she replied:

"I am Miss Carlton. By your uniform I judge that you are not of our army?"

"I am not," replied Jack, "unless your army is that of the blue?"

"My army is that of the gray," said the young girl. "Not until those who wear the blue are driven beyond our borders can the South be free and happy."

"I respect your sentiments," said Jack, "for I know it has become a matter of religion to you. But the true bor der-lines of the Union should be recognized and defended by both North and South."

"The South, in common with all other parts of t country, accepted the Constitution nearly one hundred ye ago. It binds all together. There is no hope in anythibut union."

"What right have you Northerners to force us to continue a tie which has become obnoxious and impossible?"

"Because the keeping of that tie is essential to the life and spirit of this whole country. If there comes aration it will be eternal, for all Europe waits the op nity to step over here and dismember and partition us off."

"In the case of foreign interference the North and South would make common cause," she said.

"That cannot be, except under one government," Jack. "But, pardon me, Miss Carlton, I did not come " to discuss the burning political questions of the da you. I came here to ask you to sell me supplies for any troops. They are in a state of hunger."

·Kitty Carlton looked surprised.

"My father is not at home," she said. "I don't think I would care to sell to your army. Yet, if you will wait and he, returns---"

Jack coughed a little. He could not bring himself for moment to speak the direct truth.

"Miss Carlton, I have painful news for and Y in

A great; wild cry escaped her lips.

"My father-what of my father?" she :: !! blanched face. "Don't be afraid to tell me a !. !. | | know the worst! My father—is wounded——

"Your father will not return!"

. For a moment the young girl seemed about to include the she recovered herself, and with wonderful calruments. "He is dead?",

"Yes."

For some moments her slight frame show with power in Single provide printer, and it is it is the special concerns in the "Tell ree in what meaner he met his destin?" she asked. "I know that he was doing the work of a spy for our .. service. Was he shot?"

"He was killed in an encounter in the dark with one of our men," said Jack, not disclosing the whole truth.

"And his body---"

"Is buried a few miles out yonder on the ridge. I will, if you desire, so describe the spot that you may easily find it."

"I thank you! This is a hard blow to me-althoughit was not entirely unexpected. Oh, these are dreadful times! It is indeed terrible to think of, that the country is in a state of civil war."

"Tet it prog that it has be soon ended, before more homes are stricken and hearts are broken."

. "And yet—you are in arms against us——"

"In defense of the North, of our capitol at Washington, and of the glorious old Constitution, by which we must stand!"

She turned to the overseer, and said:

"Mason, sell to the captain what he may desire. Render | defend this plantation against Manton and his guerrillas!" fir account to me later. I am now mistress of the abunda-Do you understand?"

"Yes, Miss Kitty, an' every one on ther plantation will .i.d by ye until death," replied the overseer.

She turned to Jack with a grave curtsey.

"I must be alone with my sorrow for a while," she said. "If, however, you tarry here for long, I will be glad to have yer call at the house."

"Thank you," said Jack. "I fear the exigencies of war will forbid me the honor. I appreciate the motive highly."

He lifted his cap. She walked unsteadily into the house. She persod a ross the great Southern porch and vanished.

Jack now turned to the overseer, who said, garrulously: "She's the fairest flower in this part of the kentry, capthin. Everybody loves her. Thar ain't a nigger nor a white man thet wouldn't sell his soul fer her. But—to tell ve the truth, the old man was ther curse of her life."

Jack looked keenly at the fellow.

"He was her father?"

"Yas, but a durned unnatural one."

stout. With some curiosity, he asked:

"In what respect, may I ask?"

"He never seemed to treat her as a daughter. He seemed provided them. ter jest look upon her as a part of his goods an' chattels, that he might barter or sell or give away as he liked. I food. have no respect for the memory of a man who would give such a . Il as she to thet cuss, Mark Manton.".

"I have heard something of the sort," said Jack: "Is it Trace ?"

"Trac? Why, he ortainly meant to do it. He turned! young Opdyle, one of ther demest young men in this county, away from the Louise. But I him tell we one thing, of vanity or conceit, might have attached a significance to and the over eer put his finger against his nose, "Mandon this special favor shown him by the plant is beautiful never will live to win that gal agin her wishes. You bet daughter. But Jack was not so foolish as that. sharts too many friends on this plantation."

Jeck felt a thrill of deep sympathy.

"Good!" he cried. "I hope that she never may. From all I have heard of young Opdyke, he is a noble young man."

"Thar's none better! Now, thet old Carlton's gone, thar'll be a different state of affairs here. Manton will be outside ther fence, onless"—and the overseer's face showed apprehension—"ther guerrilla comes down hyar and carries her off by force. He kin do that!"

"Yes!" said Jack, warmly, "and let me tell you that there is the whole danger. He will certainly do it."

Mason stared at the young captain.

"You believe it?"

"I know it!"

A ghastly hue came over Mason's face. He made a nervous gesture toward the house.

"She ought to go up ter Nashville fer a while," he said. "She'd be safer than here. Hang it, but I like ye, Yank! Ye're a square man, an' if all yer tribe were like you, we'd never fight ye."

"I am but a poor representative," said Jack, modestly. "One thing is sure! My company of Blues are bound to

CHAPTER VII.

A FAIR HOSTESS.

"Anything we have is yours!" cried Mason, the overseer. "Bring yer company in here an' let 'em pitch ther camp. I'll see that ye have all ther pork and beef an' chickens an' sweet potatoes ye want!"

Jack went back, and with the Blues marched into the spacious plantation yard, where they made camp.

Mason was as good as his word. Negroes brought dozens of chickens, sides of ham and bacon, with half a beef creature: There was meal for corn cakes and bushels of sweet potatoes.

The Blues were soon enjoying a feast.

They did not fear an attack from the enemy, for videttes Jack remembered the story told him by Carlton the had been stationed far out on all the roads, so that fair warning could be given in case of the enemy's appearance.

It is needless to say that the Blucs did justice to the fare

It gave them new heart and courage to have plenty of

While they were thus engaged, though, Mason, the overseer, suddenly appeared and said to Jack, in a low tone:

"Miss Kitty, would like to see you at the house!" Jack bowed, and said:

"I will respond at once."

It might be said that Jack Clark, had he been possessed

He knew that Kitty Carlton was a true girl and that her low was given to young Opdyke. As Jack thought of her summon sufficient courage to tell her of it.

Moreover, Jack Clark had an affair of the heart of his own.

At school, in Fairdale, his chum had been Will Prentiss, a Richmond youth, whose family was one of the best in Virginia.

At the breaking out of the war they had been compelled to separate. Will Prentiss had entered the Confederate service as captain of a youthful company known as the Virginia Grays.

So these two, the Northern boy and the Southern boy, erstwhile the warmest of friends, had parted nominally as foes. It was the irony of fate.

sweet and charming Nellie Prentiss. She had espoused the detest, and who is a notorious guerrilla. Ought I to obey cause of the South, of course, and had done effective work as a female spy.

Jack Clark and Nellie Prentiss had been lovers. Now they were estranged by that barrier which war had created. They might never meet again, but Jack Clark's heart was still with the fair Southern girl.

So, when the young captain stepped upon the porch of the Southern house and was met by its young hostess, he was by no means susceptible to other sentiments than those of sympathy and friendly interest.

Kitty Carlton's face showed her grief, but she greeted him cordially.

Upon the porch there had been spread a small table. Upon it was a tea urn and a few choice delicacies. She motioned him to a seat.

A colored woman poured the tea and then withdrew.

Jack Clark sat there on the vine embowered porch opposite the planter's daughter and sipped the tea and conversed with her.

For a time the topics were of a light order. But finally she asked:

"Do you foresee a speedy ending of the war, Captain Clark?":

"It pains me to say that I do not," replied Jack. "Both sides are well fortified and have large armies. Only a fearful defeat for one or the other could possibly turn the tide toward peace."

"It is to be regretted. Oh, so many valuable lives have heen sacrificed!"

"That is true, Miss Carlton."

"My poor father is gone!"--her voice broke a little. "Oh, Captain Clark, you will forgive me for bringing up the subject! But I feel so lonely! I have no one to talk upon the matter with. I know you are a true gentleman, and I need advice."

Jack looked her squarely in the eye, and replied:

"Miss Carlton, I am very glad to be your friend, and, perhaps, so far as my ability goes, your adviser. You may trust me. I give you my word."

a great reparability that I is l. This plantstion is, of hims. course, mine new. I am my father's only heir. It is for lover's present perilous position, he shivered. He could not that my father was a hard man. We have been for a long time estranged. He tried to force me to marry a man4 whom I did not like. I rebelled, and we have been as strangers for many months.

> "I could never understand my father. He was cruel to my mother. He never manifested love for me. This has made my life very hard, and---"

"Miss Carlton, I have heard your story from other lips," said Jack, "and you may rest assured that I am one of the many who thoroughly sympathize with you. You will pardon me for saying it, but your father was an unnatural parent."

"While it is painful to me to realize this, yet I cannot conceal the truth," she said. "Now I want your advice. But Will Prentiss had a sister, a typical Virginia girl, His desire was that I should marry Mark Manton, whom I my father's wish?"

Jack looked at her in surprise.

"Do you—is your heart free?" he asked.

She blushed a trifle, and replied:

"No; my heart is promised to another."

"Then you would do very wrong to sacrifice him and also your life's happiness to comply with this unreasonable desire of your parent's."

A little cry of relief escaped her lips.

"Oh, you have helped me so much," she cried. "My conscience is much relieved. I do not wish to do anything for which I might, in later years, reproach myself. I have always endeavored to be a true and faithful daughter."

"There is no minual thmes,". Add ". "April's wishes are usually wisely obeyed, but I don't think your father's point of view was correct."

"Then I have not acted wrongly?"

"No! By all means do not think or it maing your life away upon such a brute as that Manton. ' He is a dark villain. On the other hand, the man you love is——"

"What," she blushed vividly, "you know him? How do you know so much about me?"

"A certain person who has been acting as my scout has told me these things."

"Who is he?"

"At present I will not speak his name. You may know him some time. But I want you to be brave, for I have some serious news for you."

Her face paled.

"About—him?" she asked.

"Yes, about William Opdyke. He has been made a prisoner by Manton."

"A prisoner? By Manton? Why, how can that he Both are in the service of the Confederacy!"

"Yes, but to is arrested on the in most up charge of being a spy and a traitor."

Her face flushed, and her eyes gleamed like bright star-She or so and her bonds dended fixely. Jack saw and "I may very grantal. I must confide in some one. It is become dethis exhibition of Southern spirit independ in her

"A traitor! Rather it is Manion who is the traiter!

Let them try to prove the charge! Why, General Beaury card will n ver believe it of him-"

"Ah! General Beattre, rd will never by we of it."

She drew a deep breath, and a sudden light of terms can into her eyes.

. "Cir. you think he will dare - do ther? Try him apon his own responsibility? Why, he cannot! He would be m. . . in a list own with rite, and -- "

'a "present lity. If i under the authority of a car, certainly destroy it, and thus deal the enemy a blow they Height Hall and day."

Slesund trembling into her chair. Her face was plastly.

"A.d Will Opdete is in his power?"

12 1 (-. "

"I a lis dirk game! He will try and put him out of i' ay. . o ; let be will not stand in his puth."

") " "

" a moment she quailed with awful fear. Then she מודין יווויין.

"And I am wasting time here!" she cried, tensely. "He 11 h ... d. if I have to sacrifice my life. General Beau- that they were in striking distance of the supply train. r , "! vill more ed for me, and if Will O lyk 's life is! i. on his numberer shall Lang for it. Captain Clark, I in it is to all you have den. I report you, there he you print in the country. I go this hour to get a force of were and an order from General Beauregard, which Mark

In a just time to arise and bow. The next moment neross the yard to the stables.

1 - ... Prore and he saw her riding with her long dark spoken of by the negro. : ir iving to breeze. She galloped out of sight down in a saltoward Comple.

The national of the state of th t wand that of his company was not the most secure. The was in per should move on.

Salle wast feely to the spot where the Blues were encarried. Hal Martin met him with an anxious face.

"Jack, outht we to tarry here longer?" he asked. "A ... : . . has just brought word that a large body of Confeden, (es are to the north of us."

we have had a good rest. Let the boys fall in." ...

The order was obeyed, and soon the Blues were marching 'and obtained there had been of great assistance to them, were among the wagons of the train. and they felt much latter.

Em as its Blue, mareled out of the yard a mego care editors by Levand field. The terms left their tears, up to Jack and said, in an undertone:

"()'i, i.i. a. all de brack people am glad to see yo' Yan- was confusion and wreck and disaster. tree. The day tot semelin' to fell you."

1 11 ? "

"Dere am lots ob covered wagon, an' males cher vend r [cui lec e. on der turnpike, massa. Der hab supplies fo' General Brage. I done for well- yo' would like to know dat."

Jack gave a great start.

"What!" Le exclaimed, and his eyes danced. "I should be MA L ROUPLIN

"Dat am jest what I hab been lookin' free a chaince to tell yo'," said the coon. "It am jes' a lily ways ober de hill dere!"

Jack looked sharply at the negro. He saw that he was Allie the trule of he timed to the Blue and gave the order to change the course of their march.

"What's up, Jack?" asked Hal Martin, in surprise.

"We have lift upon one of Braze's supply trains," cried "You i rate. M. - Cardon. Manton is a querrila, and Jack, jubilantly. "If it is not too strongly guarded we will little expect."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE LONG RETREAT.

Of course there was much excitement when it was known

"Jack rewarded his negro informer liberally. . The Blues went forward at the double-quick for the distant turnpike.

It was certainly an opportunity not to be neglected. No harder blow can be dealt an army than to destroy its supply train.

For men will fight and die as long as they are well fed. But starvation drives them to desperate resorts.

The Blues, in less than half an hour, had reached the hill

They quickly climbed it, and the Iuka turnpike lay below them. Also they beheld a spectacle which gave them a wild thrill of joy.

Extending for over a mile was a train of wagons drawn by mules. These wagons were loaded with foodstuff for the Confederate army.

The train was scarcely guarded, for the Confederate generals would not dream of such a thing as an attack from the enemy right here in the rear of their army.

That they had reckoned wrongly was soon to be proved. "Is that of said the boy captain, with alarm. "I think Jack turn duto the Blue and cave the thrilling order:

"Forward, Blues! Charge!"

With a wild hurrah the little company dashed down the may from Ellerere plantation. The rest and the food they hill. They jumped the rail fence, and in another moment

Such of the guards as showed fight were overcome. The Horses wheeled and reared and overturned wagons. All

But the Blues worked systematically and quickly. They "Will, Pomp," said Jack, quietly, "what have you to pulled rails from the ferices nearby and heaped them up under the wagons and set fire to them. The horses were > Jack lift upon the daring plan of appropriating these to his own use. But he found that without saddles and equipments ILLs was hardly feasible.

> So the horses were stampeded. The warons and supplies were fired.

With lightning rapidity the Blues passed the length of the wagon train. The scene along the road was one of utter destruction.

The supplies were mostly of a greasy and inflammable nature, and burned readily. In a short space they would be ruined, if not destroyed.

With marvellous quickness the Blues went the length of the train. But they knew there was need of this.

The fee would certainly get an inkling of what was going on. Word would reach them, and then an overwhelming force of cavalry would sweep down to win vengeance.

But Jack Clark was too shrewd to take chances. He at saw a swarm of gray-clad Confederate soldiers. once, when the end of the wagon train was reached, drew his men off into the woods, away from the highway.

"We have got to make a quick change of base," he declared. "If we remain here we are lost."

"Now is just when we need Carlton," said Hal. "To tell here of the rile. you the truth, I don't know just where we are."

Jack. "We have dealt them a hard blow, and even if we sary, we will fall back ever that ridge in our rear." are captured, our expedition will not have been in vain."

"By no means! We have accomplished a great deal!"

" "I think so."

Through the deep woods at random the Blues marched. Their purpose was to get as far away from a highway as possible.

On they kept for a couple of hours. It was now in the and for a time it was hot and furious. middle of the afternoon.

They reckoned on having marched at least seven or eight miles. This should place them far to the east of Corinth, and Jack had begun to entertain hopes that they could feat of getting around Beauregard's right wing.

If they could succeed in this they would have a clear course before them, and stand a good chance to strike at his telegraph communications and even his line of supplies, and at the same time find it comparatively easy to strike and get away.

Jack Clark was already in a better humor. He wondered of course where Carlton was and if he had succeeded in his purpose of rescuing Opdyke:

But for the time being he was by far too deeply engrossed in the safety of the Blues to give much thought to anything else.

through the solid woods, which had seemed to assure them ever. of ultimate escape, it was not to be expected that this could last forever.

So, all at once, they came out from the dense forest. The country which lay before them was rolling and replete with high ridges.

Jack led his little company along the krow of one of these ridges. Suddenly the crack of a muslet smote upon the air. The ringing hail of a picket fellowed it.

The fellow was seen, in his uniform of Confederate gray. fires!" under an oal: tree on the top of the ridge.

fat little corporal shook his fist at the distant marksman. Tooked as if the jig was up.

"It's a bad eye you have," he shouted. "Int in a 1 '1 bead on you, old fellow, and I'll make you dance."

But the picket evidently had no idea of taking chance. He set out over the ridge at full speed. In a charter and the he was out of sight.

"That's bad," deck red Lieutenam Mentin. "We're one; to have trouble, Jack. I am afraid we've but upon some part of Bragg's main line."

"That is for us to find out," said the young captain. He spurred his horse to the summit of the ridge.

Beyond he saw a deep ravine. Along the side of this he

But he could not see any indication of a continuous lin , her that there we prore than a small party of the ... Jack was extremely both to fall back upon his track.

He made up his mind quielly. But he darked to the "Delly your men, lieutement," he end, "rell and "I know that we are between the enemy's lines," said their attack until we know how strong they are 12 min-

"All right, captain!"

The Blues were eager for a fight. A retend on my their liking. So they quickly ran out in line of harth.

They were mone too seen. Over the ridge canceller per nant of the advincing troops. Fire was ened at once.

And if was answered by the Blues. The bettle was en-

The air was full of bullets. Menday aller and the But the Confederate loss was heavy, owing to the contract of get they made against the sky line.

Jack felt confident of holding his ground, until sadd an slip out beyond the enemy's lines and accomplish the disired there was a crashing report and a shell burst over their heads. In an instant a thrill of dismay seized the Box- in Blue.

> "Artillery!" cried Hal Martin. "We can't stand against that, captain. They can cut us all to pieces."

> "That is true," agreed Jack. For a moment be was deeply troubled. Then he said:

> "There is no help for us. We must fall back over that ridge. Lieutenant Martin, take a dozen usen a di tall back to the ridge to reconnoiter. If the way is clear we will retreat."

"All right, captain!"

Hal and his men started for the ridge in their rear. They But, though the Blues had marched all this distance were soon out of sight. The battle now waved house than

> The shells became more frequent. Jack saw that they could not hope to stand their ground for long.

Then the worst discovery of all dawned upon them.

The Blues were barely holding their own. Sudd mly Jack turned and saw Lieutenant Martin and his detachment rushing back. The foe was coming over the ridge in their Pear.

"They have flanked us!" be cried. "We are between two

It was a fearful revelation. There, over the ridge, was The bullet whistled past Tom Peters car. At once the seem the Confeder to the and lines of gray beneath it. It

An officer of less nervé than Jack Clark might have gone "What is it?" to pieces at that moment.

But not so the gallant young captain of the Bliss. His He quickly and skillfully made a diagram. courage was as great and his manner as cool as ever. "You see," he said, "we are the inverted apex of a tri-as he will knew he was better off for on er lat in with a regiments of cur is s." small body of men than a large one.

accomplish what he did. With a small company like the either wing, we are brawing down upon a force in our rear." Blacs he had only to change from, making his line wedgechaped, with a front to either for. The landropped back cradaally to the edge of the woods.

It was a matter stroke, and could only have been con-Civil and executed by a genius. Such was Jack Clark.

in la sy for , and the Blues would be easily wiped out at Then we will cease our retreat, and in the darkness concentrate our force and make a quick dash for an escape through tried to come down upon both flanks, but the Blues fell back | upon it we will not be there. I bancy their line is thin just so rapidl; that they missed the mark.

tory were the force against which he had been contending.

A pitched battle was not to be thought of. His only lope was in refreat.

So back, further and further into ile wools, weni the Plue. They were simply going back in their tracks, and the fact worried Jack greatly.

he is read back into the ranks of his pursuers at Elsmere, and this meant expense or extermination.

It was the tightest position in which the Blues had been placed yet. Jack made this fact known to Hal, who at once parrook of the young captain's fears as well.

CHAPTER IX.

DREAKING THE LINE.

fell as in front of us will certainly follow us up."

"I wish we sere all mounted."

" M. 1. 5.3

- "I would venture a dash through their line."
- "We cannot do that at present."

" No."

"We have the fee in our rear also. I tell you Halleck gave us tough work to do this time."

"I should sav he did!"

But I will not give up hope yet. We will hold off here in off. the woods until nightfall. Something may turn up to aid ua then."

"I have a plan."

Hal took a pencil and a slip of paper from his pocket.

The for were in front and rear. But it a committee of this soul langle. The two extremities or corners are both pursuing ""That is very clear," agreed Jack.

Will, a regiment Jack might have found it difficult to "Well, as we are drawing back and keeping a fire up on "Just so."

> "Now, my plan is this: If the foe remain in their present respective positions, when darkness falls I suggest a move which may seem dangerous, even fatal. This is the move:

Or reach ridge poured the soldiers in gray. They were "Let compfires be built in the woods here to deceive them. But, making a bot fight all the while, the little company the center of their line. They will naturally swing around fell back into the cover of the woods. The Confederates to envelop our camp. By the time they have descended ahead of the conter. We will break through, and even if our Jack saw that three regiments of infantry and one bat- | ruse is discovered and they come back in pursuit, we have changed our line of retreat."

> Jack sad the point of once. He recognized the weak as well as the strong points of the move.

> "It will largely depend upon the strength of their center," said Jack.

"Just so," agreed the young lieutenant. "It is, so to For he knew that it must be fatal in the end. They would speak, taking a desperate chance. But if their line is stronger at the wings, as I fancy it is, for their whole attack has been from either dank, then we will succeed."

> "And I believe it is," cried Jack, with inspiration. "The very fact that their attack has been made on both wings would seem plain evidence that their main force is concentrated there."

> "Just so. Of course we would have to gain a little time and we would have to act quickly. They would, as soon as they discover our ruse, try to smother us." ...

> The more Jack studied the plan the better pleased he was with it... He believed it could be made to succeed.

> The day was waning fast, and even now the forest arches were getting dark.

The Blues continued to fall back fast enough to keep pace "It looks had for us. Jack," said Hal, dubiously. "These with the attacking lines on either side, which seemed desperately endeavoring to get ahead of them and cut them off.

> So the game went on. On the whole, the Blues were gallantly fighting an up-hill fight against odds,

> The foe were numerous and powerful enough to overwhelm them with the greatest of ease. But yet they were held at bay.

> The real danger came when darkness began to settle down.

It gave the foe a chance to creep in closer. But at the "I fear we are caught. Well, we have done our best. same time the Blues could extend their line and hold them

> As soon as if error sufficiently dark Jack and Hal proce ded to der los their plot.

Every moment they had listened for the sames of an enemy in their rear as they fell back. But those sounds did not come.

A detachment of the Blues built roaring campfires in a line through the woods. These were left burning.

Then quickly, in obedience to orders, the little company concentrated in the dark forest in front of these fires. Not an instant's time was lost.

Jack and Hal, in the lead started at the double-quick through the woods, back in the direction of the open country.

It was a desperate chance they were taking. If they should succeed, all would be well.

But if the enemy in front was too strong and held them for even the briefest space of time all would be up. The two wings would descend and envelop them. All depended upon breaking through the line of the foe.

On went the Blues.

One hunded yards were covered in a quick space of time. Two hundred, three hundred, and then suddenly a line of glittering steel showed dimly in their front.

"Steady! Hold the line!" rang out the order of the Confederate colonel.

"Forward, Blues! Fire!" shouted Jack Clark.

A volley leaped from the muzzles of the Blues' guns. Then Jack waved his sword, and shouted:

"Now, Blues, for life and liberty! Charge, bayonets!"
With a rousing cheer the Blues responded. They swept forward like a whirlwind. The next moment they were in the Confederate line.

The scene which followed baffles description. The Blues knew that their sole hope of escape was to break the enemy's line.

So they hurled themselves into the gap made by the volley. There was a sharp hand-to-hand fight. Bayonets locked with bayonets.

But the Confederate line was in just the condition Halland reckoned upon.

It was thin, and the Blues went through like a cyclone. They passed on for some few hundred yards beyond, leaving the Confederates in a disorganized state.

They ran until exhausted. Then Jack called a halt and they deployed again in a line of retreat.

They could hear the puzzled and astonished foe coming in retreat. But Jack had but few fears.

He knew that he was falling back toward the Tennessee, and consequently toward safety. So he hurried the retreat, but yet kept it orderly.

It was not long before they were back at the point from whence they had been driven. Here they climbed the ridges and fell back across the open country.

Until daylight they were pursued! Then the pursuit closed.

The Confederates gave it up. The Blues could congratulate themselves on having made a masterly evolution, which had extricated them from the most dangerous and apparently hopeless position they had ever been in.

"Hurrah!" cried Hal Martin. "We pulled out of that sid:

"I should say we did," cried the young captain. "And the credit belongs to you, Lieutenant Martin."

"Pshaw! My plan was simple enough. It might have failed."

"But it had the virtue of success. You did well."

The Blues heard this and gave Hal a cheer. He blush modestly.

"Well," he cried, "what is the move now? Ought we not to rest and recoup a bit?"

"Yes," agreed Jack, "but it is not quite time yet. We must make sure that we are safe from a surprise attack."

"How shall we do that?"

"Halt right here and send out scouts."

"Give me a chance at that," cried Tom Peters. "I am getting rusty."

"The chance is yours," said Jack. "Now, boys, you may bivouac for a time. We all need sleep."

It was a welcome order, and the Blues proceeded to execute it. In a short while they had fires going in the morning light. Some of them cast themselves down upon the ground and slept.

Jack Clark looked at his brave little company of boys rather ruefully, and noted that their ranks were thinning.

It would be easy enough to recruit, when they should get back to the Union camp.

But the loss of sixteen of their brave lads had been a hard blow. Moreover the whole company showed the effects of their strenuous experiences thus far.

Jack realized that the strain had been intense, and the Blues needed a brief rest and change. But at the present this was not in the range of possibility.

While the Blues were resting Jack and Hal mounted their horses. The company was left in charge of the second lieutenant.

They galloped away across the country, and presently came to a highway. They were riding along this, when, from the bushes beside the road there staggered a ghastly, tottering wreck of a young man.

His clothes were in shreds. His eyes were sunken. His cheeks were hollow and livid, and his right arm hun limply at his side.

"Help!" he articulated feebly. "Give a dying man help!
I know you are Yankees, but you will help me."

"Help you!" cried Jack, springing from his horse. "To poor chap, of course we will help you. But what is matter with you? What has happened to you?"

"I have been in trouble," gasped the exhausted man, as he tottered forward. "I have been in the hands of Manton, the guerrilla. He is a human fiend! He tried to torture me to death. But I escaped, and I have been a whole day and night in the dismal purlieus of a swamp."

Jack bent forward and scrutinized the stricken mer face. Then he gave a mighty cry.

"Great Casar! It is Opdyke!"

The fellow gave a start, looked in a continue day.

SE MI

chenged in forter a rocas! When have the Eli " Hi 1 2" (? " : 1 () ? " . . .

"I are Jek Clark, of the Fairdale Brues."

"Oh, I have heard of you. Among our men there is great ada inche a for you and your company."

"Yer, good! Now, my dear sir, I want to tell you that Miss Carlion, the mirl von love is seeking you."

"Suching me?" eje metal (), I dec.

"Yes."

The young lover covered his face with his hands and was silent and thoughtful for a moment.

CHAPTER X.

THE COUNTRY HELD CO. I. YOUR.

"What you say causes me much surprise," he said. "Whi should Kitty Carlton seek me?"

"Carley are in the hands of Marter the report to her. She swore ... i'm! you or die in the attempt."

"Il . ' l'ess her!" he murmured. "My own Kitty. But I !- i ven up all hopes. Her father cast me from Li door."

"Herti. Confiderite no longer."

"He is dead."

"i) 11?" Young Opdyke gave a great start, and his i. c. ' need. A wistful light came into his eyes.

t," he said. "I am by far too humble and in . I me once, some time ago. But I () little " i i man like me."

"Design of the line," cried, Jack. "I know that she is true to you and would give much to see you."

A list of the pleasure came into Opdyke's eyes. He Edition Priside.

"I must go on," he said. "I am going back to Elsmere. I shall med her one more. Then I will know my fate. Is all true that tout the hee?"

"If certainly in I is the property to go to Elia his name—Benjamin Carlton?" mere at one. Whit is the correct Best tell be. "He is the one, and a very honest man. He is an expert where did you have Manton?"

"Menton?" Oplybe pared a land across his been ent is engaged in tracking him." ... vaceely.

of doth in an distance in the hills. I was east into a I would certainly have been killed in the end." ding of the the the ming of another day. While All that day and the next the Place worked cofeir where ivit z there I discount had an had make root. It was they were. By that time O in a contract the interest. of dimensions official to allow merits on the tempt. I capit Jack for the different to all is on the enemy's through it and weather tinto the samp. Will in the comp. the weather a critical I dans day bain. I have a all will be a fille in the mon end."

ude inhuman wahii

"He will hang when I get hold of him," said Jack. "You were treated most inhumanly, Opdyke. But a night of rest will fix you all right. You shall go back to our camp, and we will soon give you remedies to restore you."

Tears gushed from the suffering man's eyes.

"You are kind to me," he said. "I can never repay you." "We do not ask pay."

"But-your camp-is it far?"

"But a short distance. You shall ride my horse," said Jack, dismounting. He assisted Opdyke into the saddle.

Back at camp the unfortunate young Confederate officer was given food and stimulants. He soon began to reveal a semblance of his former self.

He inquired eagerly about Kitty Carlton. Then Jack told him unreservedly the story of Carlton, the scout, and of the tragic death of Daniel Carlton.

Opdyke listened with interest.

"Dead," he muttered. "And at the hand of his brother, whom he so foully wronged. Only think of that. Poor Kitty! She has suffered much. Oh, I must gain strength to go to her, for I fear she may fall into Manton's hands."

"I advise you not to leave here until you are stronger," said Jack. "I have decided to rest my command here for twenty-four hours. Then we shall strike out to make a raid on the enemy's rear."

"Very good," said Opdyke, with a smile. "It is curious that you should reveal your plans to me. You must not forget that I am a Consederate of the rank of lieutenant."

"I am assured that you are honorable," said Jack.

"You may be sure I would reveal nothing I have seen. But I presume my attitude here is that of a prisoner of war?"

"No," replied Jack. "I do not hold you a prisoner. You were not in service when captured. I am deeply interested Later to the She was raised in affluence. She in your affair with Miss Carlton. I much admire the young woman, and I desire to see her happy."

> "God bless you," said Opdyke, with deep feeling. "If all Yankees were like you, we'd never fight 'em."

> "I am sorry that the land should be cursed with such a war," said Jack. "But we must fight it out to the bitter end, I suppose."

> "Oh, yes. But let me ask you, where is this man who claims to have killed his brother in self-defense. What is sort. Hela and the dile dill. Theta, and at pres-

· "I understand all now," said Opdyke. II am sure all "Die, yes! I result it now. He tortured me to the point will come out well in the end. My escape is a miracle, for Mornible! Caldinal Hat. "Marton Sould! , confirm, desire, d'Ontolie, de la the use indunan wall." their stay in the present locality one of them came in with guerrillas were making for this ford. a report.

"An armed body of men are sweeping up the valley on the other side of this ridge," he said. "I could not get near enough to learn whether they were of the regular Confeder- They came slowly down to the ford and crossed over. ate army or not."

"We will be prepared," said Jack.

By this time Opdyke had quite recovered his strength. Only in looks did he show the effects of the terrible experience he had been through.

He was eager to join in the attack upon the guerrillas. He insisted upon falling into the ranks when the Blues formed for the march.

Jack marched the Blues to the summit of the ridge. From here a good view of the region beyond could be had.

Somewhere over in that region was the army of Price, hastening to join Beauregard at Corinth. As history narrates it, they only got as far as Iuka.

Jack studied the country with great care. His mind was wholly made up as to his plan of action in the future.

After dealing the guerrilla, Manton, a blow and ascertaining, if possible, the fate of Kitty Carlton, Jack intended to make a detour to the north through the region between Price's advance and the right wing of Beauregard's army. All this, of course, depended upon the state of affairs at that time.

If Price occupied the region and filled it completely, the project would be out of the question.

But Jack did not believe this would be the case. It afforded him the only logical way of return to his own army.

No doubt by this time Halleck would be wondering what was the fate of the Blues. Jack smiled grimly.

' He understood quite well that the great Union general 'had never dreamed that the Blues would venture to penetrate so far into the enemy's territory. In fact he doubtless did not believe it possible.

: "When he learns that we have been almost to the gates of Corinth and have destroyed General Bragg's supply train, he will believe we have done something," he reflected.

Jack walked along the ridge and studied the country below carefully.

The large of the state of the s men going through a distant ravine.

He studied them closely.

From their dress and appearancé he concluded at once that they were guerrillas. He even fancied he saw Manton at their head.

He watched them long enough to become satisfied that , they were bearing to the north. At once he gave orders to the Blues to go forward on the double-quick.

"We must cut them off," he said. "They must not escape us."

The Black of Continue of the was after a Pol'owing di for a .. i de a read la fadisay. Here sindir a a bana him.

Jack sent scouts out far and near. On the third day of they rested on their arms. It was Jack's belief that the

The Blues crouched in the undergrowth and waited. It was over an hour before anything unusual occurred.

Then from the forest emerged a couple of advance riders.

They were not molested.

The Blues were after bigger game. They kept silent and waited until the tramp of horses' feet and rattle of sabres told of the coming of the guerrillas.

The next moment they came into sight. A hard looking crew they were.

Dressed in nondescript, it was no wonder that their presence in the country terrified the honest people of the region.

There was nothing too villainous, no outrage too dastardly for this crew. At their head rode Manton himself.

On the desperado's face rested a dark cloud. It could be seen that he was not altogether in a cheerful mood. With short terms of command he ordered his men to cross the stream.

It was Jack Clark's opportunity.

"Ready, Blues! Fire!"

A rattling volley cut into the ranks of the guerrillas. Men tumbled from their saddles, and horses went careening up the highway.

For a few moments the guerrillas were thrown into state of panic and disorganization. Their horses broke and plunged with the volleys delivered at them.

And Jack did not spare them.

With quick, sharp orders he directed the fire:

"Steady, Blues! Fire slow! Give them a volley in flank now! Ready, fix bayonets!"

With a rattle of steel the bayonets were fixed. The warrilla chief was behind his men, showing shameful cowardi...

The guerrillas tried to answer the fire. They were of the kind to fight in the open, though.

So they drew back. But the fight soon began to assume heavy proportions. Jack wondered if he had done the best possible thing in attacking the guerrillas. What might have been expected now occurred. The guerrillas s determined to essay an assault in their turn.

They massed behind a small ridge and the |; 1

They had dismounted, their horses being sent to the rea-With their earbines blazing they came down the ridge.

Jack Clark had no trouble in holding his men firm. They were individually brave.

But he saw that the volleys of the larger force were ning his ranks woefully.

CHAPTER XI.

The tain felt a chill as he saw.

He could not think or a ribeding them in sigh whole set manner. Yet, for a time, it seemed as if nothing else could he done.

The guerrillus must be held and thrown hask to admit on and sort of retreat. The Blood trot so a trangenous to do this.

Exaltingly and confident, the error of culticus now came charging down. Jack on spot a masket and joined in the tiring line.

"Swaly, logs!" to call d. as lo bit of a carriedge and rammed It nome. "Give it to them! Drive them back this once. We will then change base.

With a horoic effort the Blues made response.

A concentrated walks of and a gap in the grant les ranks. Jack was quick to see the opportunity.

It was a risky thing and am few of such number. Bre if successful the foe would be scattered.

He leagued to the front instantly and gave the order:

"Forward, Blue! Charge!"

Into the gao with a wild cheer went the Blues with bayonets it. !. Their impact was terrific, and they went here." through the enamilled line like a dring weder.

The 24 willby were state and by so force a counterasatt. The block in a near thy sair now? remais a conir i. The tent of the Bluescan Print par in dy. The month the description and scattered repeat to General Beautegard." there like chaff. Br. John was not froll andy. He know Tow in a victory and how to secure it.

So be pare the word to full back. The Black did so in " al or br, leaving the demoralized guerrillas to reform reply: · to 't'ey could.' · ·

(): try infrenchments were thrown up,

In the second of · (1 */. 1 p. 1 . 11.

But to the March Commence

"Hall" " " " " What is that?" . . .

~; it it v ~. (), 11, 00 20111 () 1 (10 (2), 1 (10 (2)) 1 (10 (2))

" man Par With the was Manton.

As in the contract of

" I Was 's " Wheel are the world of the contract of the contra

" Papara L. Capa to state 100

" I many to the

() in the service of the person exists the

"Let the contract the contract the time," is said [him.] is a · Wii (1) 1 (1) (1) (1)

"the interior of the and the angular of against hands and knit brows he faced the villain. ' [4 , ' 4] - " ; . ' '

"! would not trust him."

But duck and your Oaks' and adapted to meet the truce-heaver. Mandon's face grew livid as sight on the escaped prisoner.

Well, sir," said Jack, curlly, "what is your desire?"

Manton shot a vin lictive Plance of Optile, and then Suld:

"I have come to ask if you have had fightin' enough."

"What do you mean?"

"Jest what I say.".

"In answer I will say that we will fight just as long as. you will, and I bell to we have you whipped."

"Do ye?" snarled the outlaw. "Don't you believe it! We are just about to who you off the earth. But we thought first we'd give you a chance to surrender.

Jack laughed at this.

Don't entertain any such delusion," le seid. "We have no intention of such a thing."

"Then ye won't take my terms?"

"No!"

"All right," gritted Manton. "I kin only tell ye that we will show no quarter. We'll kill every man of ye."

"That is Indian style," said Jack. "In retaliation I will say that we shall hang you on capture."

"Ye'll never capture me!"

"Is this all you have to say?"

"Wait a moment, I'd like a word with this young cub

He turned to Opdyke with a venomous glitter in his eyes. "So ye slipped the hab, didn't ye? I suppose ye feel

"I am sale to square accounts with you as soon as I can

"He'll lang yethen orient ye do. Your position at this moment proves ye a traitor."

Opdyko o ve a stant. His bands e'enched, and he made

"You treacherous hound! You can prove nothing of. the sort.".

"I. I not tell you something clse," chuckled the villain. "The girl, whom ye had hoped to marry, is now miné."

"Fast! You can call me name sately now. She came n to our camp on her hors and demanded your release. I detained her-of course."

There was a ring of exultation in the villain's voice that and level Onduke. He saw that the guerrilla was telling the truth.

. Kitty Carlton, anxious to know her lover's fate, had holdly ridden into the outlaw's camp and demanded his re-

Whatever might be said as to her lack of wisdom in this move, it proved that she was ready to sacrifice her life for

Opdyke quivered with deep emotion. With elenched

"Manton, if there is a spark of manifood in you, show it now. That young woman does not love you, nor she never will. Set her free, as an lonorable man should."

Manton laughed scornfully.

"You anared me," he said. "For what do you take me? I am not a fool to throw away the prize when once it is in my gra-p."

"But the will never marry you."

"You make a mistake," said the guerrilla, who had dropped the vernacular of the guerrilla class, and thereby showed that he was a man of education. He showed his hopes that I will win success." teeth like a tiger. "She will marry me!"

"Not of her own free will."

"Bah! that is nothing! I will tame her with the greatest of ease. I know how to handle such as she. By the way, Opdyke. captain, this man is a Confederate traitor. If you will deliver him up to me I will draw off my men and molest you no more."

Jack smiled grimly.

"You are singularly generous, in view of the fact that I am pursuing you."

"You pursuing me?"

"Yes; I mean to wipe you and your band out, root and branch."

Manton shrugged his shoulders.

"Have you counted the cost?" he asked. "Do you realize that you must have a larger force than you now have?"

"I shall not require it."

"Once again I make you the fair proposition. Will you turn this man over to me?"

"No!"

An oath escaped Manton. His face flamed with passion. "Then I will never leave your track until I have exterminated you and your band of so-called Blues. Make no mistake, your fate is sealed. I will give no quarter, but will wipe you out eternally."

"Very good," said Jack. "I shall be pleased to see how you will keep your threat."

"And you shall see it."

"Is this all you have to say?"

"Yes."

"Very good! Return to your line, for I shall resume our attack at once."

Furning and raving, Manton walked away. In a fewmoments he was with his men, and the conference was over.

"A greater scoundrel never went unhung," said Jack, forcibly, as they returned to the Blues' trenches. "I wonder if he told the truth about the young girl?"

Opdyke nodded in distress.

"Oh, yes, I fear it is so," he said. "It would be just like her to do a thing of that kind. She would sacrifice everything for me."

"She must be rescued," said Jack, foreibly. "No time must be lost. It is not likely that she is with this party. Where would he keep her?"

Opdyke shook his head.

"I hardly know, unless it is the cabin where I was confined," he replied. "I can find my way thither all right."

"Very good. Suppose I send a detachment up there to rescue her?

Opdyke gave an eager cry.

"That is the best plan," he cried. "Let me lead the party."

"Very well," agreed the some gear, fain of the Billes. dozen of them and start for the edin at or ce."

"Heaven bless you!" cried the young lover. "I have

"I shall pray that you will."

It did not take long to make the arrangements. Jack detailed Corporal Peters and six of the Blues to accompany

A short while later they slipped away into the forest in the rear of the Blues' intrenchments. They were soon beyond hearing.

Jack now gave his attention to the foe in front. It did not take him long to direct that fire be opened on them.

For a time the guerrillas made answer, then they retuck out of range. There was an interval of inaction.

But Jack had no idea that Manton had given up the battle. He was, beyond doubt, planning some strategem.

"Very well," he muttered, "we are ready for them."

"Do you know what I think?" asked Hal.

"No!"

"They have sent for help to the near of Confederate outpost. Their plan is to deliver us over to the fee in that way."

Jack gave a start. He saw the legic of this plan at once. It decided him upon one point.

He knew that under such circumstances it would be foolish to sit still and await their fate.

There was only one thing to do. He quickly decided upon it. He must attack the guerrillas at once or make a retreat.

CHAPTER XII.

THE HAND-CAR AND ITS OCCUPANTS.

Jack could not see the feasibility of a retreat just yet. To him the only course open was to attack.

He knew that to remain idle was to invite the fee to core up and surround him in overpowering numbers.

Hal finally asked:

"Well, cartain, what is if to be?" .

"There is only one chance for us," said Jack. "We must wipe out Manten and hi gang at once or they will surely wipe us out."

"Then we shall attack?"

"Yes."

"Shall I give the order?"

."Wait a moment!"

Jack stopped out in front of the trenches and addressed the hovs.

"Copyrades," he cried, "we are at this moment in a preenions position. If we remain here to wait for the fee to attack us we are lest, for they have sent for reinforcements ead intend to entirely surround us. There is only one "I chance for us, and I want to warn you in advance that it can ill afford to spare the control has shall have I dit a find one. We have alted the guerrillas and scatter them chechually. We can then safely retreat. But every near must stand ready to fight to its death. Not one must hardly to ther I believe that we can be at them. But even if we are defeated, we will diseas men should, without fear and without reproach."

The Blues rose and cheered as one man. It was cratify-ing to Jack to see that they were in carriest.

At once he gave the word. They left the transhes and advanced to the attack.

Slowly they moved up on the guerrillas' position.

Some shels were fired into the thicket. But there was no reply.

Jack, lowever, was prepared for this and governed himdi accordingly. He fancied it was the purpose of the energy to held their fire until within effective range.

So be thinned his line as much as possible and swung around by the flank. But still no fire was returned.

Then it. Blus princt a with, into the thickers, which is the still no replace of the foc.

The residual of the foc.

On parted the Blues, until subjectly a startling discovery to a specie. There was no for-

The period of later beld by the enemillar was valence.

They had departed suddenly, and for some inexplicable recon. The Blues pushed on for half a mile beyouth their position.

But not a sum of them was to be seen. They were gone.
"What the device does this mean?" cried Hal Martin, in "the cont. "What do you think of it, Jack?"

The yearng captain was silent a morent. To him there so all a certainty of some strange scheme. It was extainty a strange of the villain, Mandon.

But what this drategens was now remained a problem.

Secunding, some poverful reason there was for Manton's strange action. If was some while before Jack hill upon a theory.

When an energy withdraws from before you in superior fore, it is a rall, owing to the fact that the ground is not well chosen or it; communications are threatened," philosophized Jack. "I con think of nothing class"

"Ab, that give a hint," cried Hal. "Do you upposite: Opticke and Peers have reached the cabin where this girl is imprisoned, and he has fallen back to prevent her rescue."

"They have hardly had thee for that."

"That is true. By the way, is it not strange that we have heard nothing of our scout, Carlton?"

"I Lava thought of that," agreed Jack. "It certainly a move that may account for this action of Marion's?"

"I can hardly see what it can be, unless he has brought reinforcements unexpectedly."

"Well, what is to be done?"

"If Opdyke was here we would go on to the cabin, where it is assumed that the girl prisoner is confined. But I do not know its location."

"Nor I," agreed Hal.. "But there is yet another plan."
"What?"

"We might employ scouts and trail them. It will be easy enough to do that."

"No!" said Jack, decisively. "We must not forget that we are on the defensive. We are in the enemy's country, and our only method is to keep out of all battles possible, commit whatever damage we can safely, and let it go at that."

"Very good," said Hal. "Then what is our next move?"

"We will get out of this region certainly. I think we may march south for a short distance. We must keep ever on the alert. It is about time for us to think of returning, for it is nearly time for the advance on Corinth."

"One thing puzzles me."

"What?"

"Where is the brigade of four regiments that Halleck was to send in behind us as possible reinforcements? Have they turned back?"

Jack gave a start.

He recalled now fully General Halleck's promise. The regiments had certainly not come up.

It was quite likely that they had refreated in the face of a superior demonstration by the Confederates. The Blues, being a small body of men and rapid marchers, had pushed through safely.

However this was, Jack knew that the Blues must depend wholly upon their own resources for extrication from their present position of danger.

So the Blues started away on a march southward.

Jack proceeded with the extreme of caution. He knew that at any moment they might stumble upon the foc.

For the rest of the day they kept on through woods and lanes, until, near evening, they came to a line of railroad. Jack did not know what points it connected, but he saw that it was of temporary construction and, no doubt, for military purposes.

This indere ted him greatly, for he law a chance for another exploit. The Blues made camp in the woods nearby, and the young captain set out to invest at a

With Dal Martin be climbed the rouble ball inspital the frack. The rail, were listed and the tien were of loss, showing basiy construction

Even as they stood there, a distant whistle was heard, followed by the roar of an approaching train.

"Hello!" exclaimed Hal. "Here comes a train. Let us see what it is."

The two young officers secreted themselves in a thicket nearby and waited.

In a few moments the locomotive swung around a curve. Behind it were a dozen flat-cars. On these were grouped hundreds of soldiers, dressed in gray.

"Hello!" exclaimed Hal. "What fools we were, Jack!" "Why?"

"They are going to Corinth to reinforce Beauregard." "Well?"

"We ought to have ripped up the rails and stopped them." Jack shrugged his shoulders.

"I am afraid we would have caught a Tartar. They greatly outnumber us," he said.

"That's so," admitted Hal. "But we ought to smash the railroad, some way or other."

"That we will do. But—hello!"

The exclamation escaped Jack's lips, and he sprang out of his concealment. Around the curve there had swung a hand-ear.

On it were four occupants. Two were men and two were women.

The men were dressed in the rough style of guerrillas. The women were, respectively, a young white woman and a negro wench.

It is hardly necessary to say that Jack and Hal were interested, inasmuch as the young white girl was recognized by them.

She was no other than Kitty Carlton.

Up the track rushed the two young Union officers, flourishing their pistols. The terrified guerrillas leaped from the hand-car and ran. The hand-car slackened speed.

In an instant Jack sprang upon the car and stopped it. The negro woman cowered in terror, but a wild cry of joy escaped Kitty Carlton.

"Oh, it is Captain Clark," she cried. "We are savedsaved!"

"You are right, Miss Carlton," cried Jack, as he sprung down from the hand-car. "Allow me to assist you."

"Thank you. Oh, where did you come from, Captain have had a terrible time, and I was made a prisoner by rillas! Hip, hooray!" Manton."

come from?"

But a few hours ago some of Manton's men came, and do the same by me."

marched us down to the railroad and put us on this car. Where they intended to take us, I don't know."

"Then Manton was not with them?"

"No."

"Strange! He and his men have disappeared. My company of Blues is encamped just over here in the woods. We have been trying to locate the villain."

"We learned from one of the guerrillas that there is serious trouble a few miles below here," said Kitty.

"Trouble?" asked Jack. "Of what sort?"

"The Confederate outposts have been attacked by a large body of Union troops, who have come up the Tennessee in flatboats. There has been hot fighting down there. I fancy that is why Manton sent these men to take us away. He feared that we would be rescued."

In all their lives Jack and Hal had never received a greater shock of surprise.

"What," gasped the young captain, "do you mean that? Our Union troops in force down there?"

"Yes."

The two young officers looked at each other. Then Hal exclaimed:

"I have it!"

"What?"

"Halleck has kept his word. He has sent us reinforcements, but it was by way of the Tennessee River!"

Jack saw that this was likely the truth, and for an instant his joy was so great that he could hardly contain

CHAPTER XIII.

HOLDING UP THE TRAIN.

"I don't care how he has sent the reinforcements," Jack cried, "so long as he has sent them. Hooray! We are all right, Hal!"

"Of course we are!"

"We shall pull out all safe!"

"You bet!"

"We'll rip their old railroad up. We will hit another Clark? I cannot tell you how glad I am to see you. Oh, I supply train, and we'll exterminate Manton and his guer-

The delight and enthusiasm of the two young Union "I heard all about it, Miss Carlton. But where have you officers knew no bounds. But Kitty Carlton, white-faced and anxious, had waited.

"We have been confined in an old cabin up in the ridges. | "Now that I have given you good news," she said, "praction

"Well?" asked Jack.

"Tell me, have you heard of him?"

"Who? Oh, I know!" Jack gave a little leap in the nir. "He is all right, Miss Carlton. He escaped, and now, with our corporal and a detachment, is looking for you."

The young girl staggered, and seemed for a moment to grow faint with excess of joy. Then she because calla, and, extending her hand, said:

"I thank you."

"You are welcome," replied Jack. "But I feel that I owe you more than you owe me. Do not worry further about Mr. Opdyke. He will certainly soon be with you. Now, advise you to go right back to El-mere and wait for him to come."

"I will take your advice," said Kitty, joyfully. "Butwith all the fighting going on about here, Elemere will be Lardly a safe place to stay. I have an aunt in Conin i ---

"Go there then, by all means. But hang it! There is the rub. I cannot send you an escort---"

"I will stay with you and your company for the premat, if you will permit me," sho said. "Lydia will give me her services, and I shall be all right."

"Yo' kin feel easy about dat, missy," said the colored woman. "I'se done ready to go anywhere wif you"

"Good!" cried Jack. "We shall be honored with your company, and I will provide for you as well as I can. You may see some rough service, for there is likely to be hard fighting all about us."

"Do not fear for me," said Kitty, "I am not afrail, avon well know."

"Indeed, I do know it. Anyone who is plucky enough to walk riold into the guerrilla's den and defy him as you did, need not be accused of cowardice."

"I do not know that it was wise of me to do then," stsaid. "But I could not believe that he would dare detain THC."

"He is a villain."

"I hoped that he would yield to my entreaties to spare Will."

"He would have lang him before your eye. But he wa fortunate enough to escape."

So it was arranged at once that Kitty should remain with the Blues. As it was now easy to find the way to the guerrillas' cabin from Kitty's directions, Jack decided to send a messenger thither to see if Corporal Pet is and Opdyke could be found.

In the meantime the Blues began to divert thems less your terms of surrender." by tearing up the railroad track.

In a short while the road was made a wreck.

And just as they had completed the task, the distant whistle of a locomotive was heard. It was plain that another train was coming.

For a moment Jack thought of taking a hasty leave of the place. He knew that the train might have a large force of Confederates on board.

But Hal was in favor of awaiting results.

"Let us see who is on that train," he cried. "Let us hold it up. If they are too many for us we can retreat."

"All right," agreed the young captain, "it shall be so."

In order to hold up the train it was necessary to send a number of the Blues far down the track to rip up the rails after the train had passed.

There was no time to lose. The train was coming rapidly. In a short while she came in sight.

At once the engineer saw that the track was up alread of him, and he sent up a wild danger whistle. The train consisted of the locomotive and three cars.

The car windows went up, and the soldiers peered out. But they ged their tands in again quielly at a volley from the Blues.

In an instant the engineer attempted to reverse his en-Piec. But the party of Blues in his nar lad ripped no the rails.

The train was stell I. In an instant the gray uniforms were piling out of the resident orming on the railroad or bankment.

Jack saw that their number was not much larger than his own. In fact, they seemed to be a sort of bodyguard to several officers, resplendent in gold lace.

The daring plan or capturing these officers came to Jac!. He at once determined to accomplish it.

So he gave the order to the Blues to altack.

They dashed forward with a wild cheer. The Confederates met them with a hasty volley, but their own ranks were shattered the next moment by a volley from the Blues.

Seeing that they were surrounded, one of the officers held up a white handkerchief on the point of his sword, in token of surrender.

At once Jack ordered his men to cease firing. He advanced to meet the officer, and was given a great start. He saw the stars upon his shoulders and was thrilled when he said:

"I am General Clifton, of the Confederate army. You have the last of us, coptain, and we are chapelled to ask

"Unconditional," replied Jack, "save that you may keep The rails were ripped up and fires made of the log ties, your side arms, and will be reparded as prisoners of war, subject to exchange."

"We can ask for no more," said General Clifton, "and I thank you, captain."

"I am Captain Jack Clark, of the Fairdale Blues."

"Captain Clark, I present to you Colonel Lamont and Lieutenant Fraser. We are members of Beauregard's staff."

Jack shook hands with the Confederate officers, and their bodyguard marched forward and laid down their arms.

General Clifton was astonished when he saw what a small force they had yielded to.

"Why, I thought you had a regiment, at least," he said. "We could have given you a hard fight."

"Of what avail would it be?" said Jack. "You would have sacrificed a lot of your men."

"But we are needed at Corinth."

"So are we, and we are going there at the earliest moment."

Jack now, however, was in a quandary. He did not really know what to do with his prisoners.

He was in the position of the man who bought the elephant. He had no supplies. He was far from his own army.

What could he do?

There was but one thing he could do, and this was to keep up a bold front.

He believed something would turn up, and, as a matter of fact, it did, but hardly as he expected.

The surrender was completed. The train was derailed and left in a wreck beside the track. The telegraph wires had been cut.

Surely the Blues were carrying out a bold enterprise. But Jack had gained courage, knowing that reinforcements were between him and the Tennessee.

But he felt that he had gone the limit.

It was now in order to withdraw as gracefully as possible from the locality and make his way to the Tennessec. So he gave orders to the Blues to fall in for a long march, with the prisoners in advance.

Jack had heard nothing from Corporal Tom Peters and Opdyke. The messenger he had sent to the cabin returned. "They are not there," he reported. "We found no trace of them."

"All right," aid J: 1, 1 or 15.11 . "I I have there behind. Peters is a valuable man, but I see no other way." "Don't you worry," said Hal, "Pete will show up all right. You need not fear for him."

"I hope so."

The Blues now started on their march eastward with their prisoners. They left the railroad behind.

Kitty Carbon role less at a conflict the fighter of tall A dock a recall do it." There was fill har and model in her har.

"I hope Manton has not recaptured Will," she said. "L he has, I shall never hear from him again."

"Have no fear," said Jack, "I think they will turn up all right."

For over an hour the Blues marched on. Thus far not a sign of the fee was to be seen. Jack listened for the distant sounds of a possible conflict between the Union reinforcements and Beauregard's outposts.

But nothing was to be heard.

They had passed through long stretches of forest, and now came to a little cut between two round-topped hills.

Suddenly down through this cut poured a line of armed men. They opened fire on the Blues.

So abrupt was their coming, and so sudden their attack, that there was confusion for some moments. But a few ringing orders from Jack straightened matters out.

The prisoners were quickly relegated to the rear and guards placed over them. The advance line of Blues deployed and answered the fire of the foe.

It required but a few moments for Jack Clark to realize a startling fact.

They were cut off and attacked by Manton and his guerrillas. Where the villain had come from was a complete mystery.

But that he was in front of them, and with a powerful force was enough. Jack knew that he had a desperate job before him.

The guerrillas outnumbered the Blues. They were savage and determined to crush the little Union command. They poured volley after volley down through the cut.

Then the cry went up:

"They are coming!"

CHAPTER XIV.

BACK TO SHILOH.

Every man in the little company of Blues stiffened with that cry. He knew well what it meant.

The least break in the line, a flinching, or a show of iter would, perhaps, be the end. The guerrillas were out tot blood. They meant to give no quarter.

It was a purpose of annihilation that animated them. Murder was in their hearts.

So Jack spoke sharp, resolute words:

"Steady, Blues! It's all up if they get in. Throw the pr

The brace Bore in Rive, here or, moded no urging.

The grant manner of his in the first the comment Heart Carina his in the Title Control Property

Bock in the pair crouded Killy Carlton. Her law was linched, and her heart trembled for her brave defenders. Since well what it meant for her if they were overthe distance of a time of the continualty of a time in the state in property the Blues checked them. And retired them. Then Jeek aw lis done.

(.... An earnest prayer was on her lips.

1) :. 11 come the horde of guerrillas on the charge.

; i i re ring cry he sprang forward:

"!! Its! Forward, Blues! Charge!"

The line of I'm no much for the guerrillas.

The result of the state of the : was like a maniac.

it ! !! rein saw him, and, picking up the musket of a ' ... olier, he took aim at him and fired.

Vivor or d back and fell. Seeing the fall of their by the guerrillas held no longer.

The bille and I d madly. The Blues sert volters in the there, but all not pursue.

Jay Hal's action.

"You ! rought him down, Hal," he cried.

"I'm replied the young lieutenant. "I hope I did not on?" kill bin."

1 in a restriction is a swo young officers were bending orer 1'. estric', no carilla. Howas samighing to get upo a his feet.

The late that the grazed his skull, stunning him for : No ene hindered his rising, and he stood, pale among his captors.

The community of the face was most repulsive, so the state of the part of was it with committee and bate. it is furtially for an avenue of escape.

is the was none.

II to a hope lessly trapped.

"I Man a sel Jak in told, har for a year have rest alliers of van land.

"I - I sarrader," gasped the guerrilla, "I'm a prisoner CI Valla

"Then well we colours you for? Don't decire your- mer." ... If, my fine jox. The later is your feed!

"Yo, no! For pity's sale, I be of you, don't lill me! I'll car meyer to take up arms alain. Let it live! Me li" i proins! Dant take Haray! Dant till e !"

Jack burn d away in disgusi from the specious plea lines!

interest.

"Miss Carlion," he said, "the arranded will proceed you no more."

She drew a deep breath.

"Will you-hang him?"

"Yes."

"His alange life. Do on this is the life of the 11-6

"Never," replied Jack, firmly. "He is a treacherous snake, who would turn at the slightest chance."

The purrillus did not return to the dist. The tisfederate general, Clifton, had been a witness of all.

"Captain Clark," he said, "I hope you will not accept that fellow or his followers as a type of our soldiers. He is not recognized by our military authorities."

"I understand," said Jack. "He is as repugnant to you as to me."

"Quite so."

"I intend to see justice done."

"In that you are right. Such men are a menace to the country. But I admire your little company. They are Chiera to the hard lane. And the viring to other in west."

"That is certainly a compliment to the boys," replied Jack. "I thank you in their behalf."

"What is your purpose now, captain? Will you march

"By all means! I am informed that reinforcements are but a few miles away."

Jack n whari large folds, fire it we will a the see that the dead were buried.

This task over the Blues were once again on their march. They passed through the little cut, and then were given a thrill of surprise.

Far down in the country below they saw a cloud of smoke. To their cars came the vole, in softmusted y, and into i air rose shrieking shells.

It was plain that a heavy engal (a. 1.1 was falin , ... down there. Jack's nerves timeled.

He lines: that Color I Pet was reciprocate, and to minis not line, must be below the for a three the films williand . some.

They say lines of gray deploying in the words, and he-"Are you?" said the young captain, in a Lard tone, hour, in trendes, were lines of the warding of their

> It had at it the gree for outnessed on the dite, and this gave Jack a firell.

Southing the first in the tempto come in of extent. An other place there is not to fact the thing the "Dayon, with at Ilm. "Inc. move. Jack?" erich Hat.

L- 1. ...

"I am afraid that if the blue regiments don't change to one man." front they will get in their rear."

"No they won't," said Jack.

"What?"

. "Not while we can prevent it."

Hal looked up in surprise.

"Can we do any good down there?" he asked.

"Certainly we can! We can ask for no better chance. We will march down that road to the right and come up in the enemy's rear."

"But if they turn—they are superior in numbers—"

"If they turn they are lost. Simply leave it to me, Order the Blues forward at once."

No time was lost. The Blues cut down to the highway below in double-quick order. They were now but half a mile in the rear of the Confederates.

The rear guard saw the blue line coming and the alarm was given. At once the pickets in the rear were driven in.

Astonishment and terror seized upon the Confederate line. Nothing is so demoralizing as an attack in the rear.

In less time than it takes to tell it they began to huddle and lose their formation. They fell back at right angles, of her made and lose their formation. and this gave the Union regiments in front the chance they in the line. wanted.

They care out a late and clare. In an instead the night that a programe on the picket line. Confederate line rolled up. The sight of the blue uniforms in their rear was too much.

A fearful rout was quickly in progress. For over an hour they were pursued. Then the Fairdale Blues found into the light of the campfires. themselves mingled with the men of Folsom's regiment.

It was some while later that Jack met the Union colonel, who greeted him with delight.

"Well, we did find you," he cried. "General Halleck had no idea you would dare to penetrate so far into this region?

"Grand Hallick does not know the Blass," said Jack. "We always go where we are sent."

"Well, you've raised the deuce in Bragg's rear. They thought Sherman had cut through and they were going to he surrounded."

At this Jack landad.

size la mily train, out a cailread and opium la concraft and Lisbert quard."

The Contain prison of we also have his up from the rear "He shall be the lieur of the place," cried Op lyla. "C. pi.i. 1 { 119.6.] (, cr i , C ' ...] fulls on.

"Bell'ainales d'aly you en doan lere to look por restals up arms avin i the United States again." Lucy it.

"Well, he didn't," said Folsom. "Y

"Who?"

""The scout, Ben Carlton!"

Jack gave a great exclamation.

"Conton!" be cried. "You don't meen it? Inil . . . turn to S' i' ...

"Ye, and induced us to a me to year while. He reresented the your were all victors, ear of consent to annihilated. A: Art Hall ... All I to the transfer of the much trouble for just a handful of men. Be, Commenter hung on, and finally Halleck put us aboard the part as and sent us up the Tennessee. We got here, it is an in the in time."

Jack was much overcome with emotion.

"Where is Carlton?", he asked.

Folsom looked at him hearly a moment, and soil:

"He is dead! He was shot by a Cor ! :: ! ! ! !-Looter as we were disembarking. He was a

Jack was silent. A great wave of emotion Tille It was seen all and the first in the seen of the

Then be mirred and willed ever. He did not not kitt

It was while the Union pointents was in the art of the

Colonel Felon, sonth unand describe what the nation sea tring dana is popultable dana da con

Congresal Term Peters wind him star II + 1 1 1 1 1 1 1 1

Jack sprang forward with a cry of jov.

"It's my corporal!" he cried. "Hello, Peters! Where is Opdyke?"

"Sure, he is here all right," cried the fit little control. "but we couldn't find the girl. Much as ever we could deto find our way here."

Opdyke was grasping Jack's hand the motion of

"Have y u-- any news?" he ask d, housely.

"Come with m. !"

A few moments later, with a gladery, the young (' afederale lieutenent classed the girl la lovel to his ore. "I four that is an exportation," be said. "But we de- There was now no obstacle it tween them, no harrier to Hair lov.

"And we owe it all to Captain Clark," sail Kitiv, with Colord Filen was a conilled when be learned this, pretty blober, "If he will visit read them?"

tain (lark, I ask you to release me on parole. I interel ior 1." ... Jack. "I didn't think Gueral Hallock "Your request shall be granted," said Jack, "and I wish you both rauch joy."

his fair bride-to-be rode away to Elsmere. Jack heard said. "I shall bear you in mind in the future." from them often in after years.

hanged that morning. Thus ended his brutish career. | special orders, which were not long in coming.

iderate troops were coming down to cut of follown and his regiments. Now that his no many as a complished, enemy's country in Musisippi, they were cut off and the Union colonel had no reason for endangering his men placed between two fires. by remaining longer in that section. So they marched back to the landing on the Tennessee.

Here they went aboard the gunboats awaiting them, and soon were on their way back to Pittsburg Landing.

The next day Jack Clark and Colonel Folsom reported to General Halleck. That great commander regarded the GRAY IN THE LEAD," which will be the next ran ber captain of the Blues critically.

The next morning, having procured horses, Oplyke and "I can see why Grant male such good use of you." he Higher praise the young captain of the Blues could not By Colonel Folsom's order, the guerrilla, Mandon, was live asked. He remand to his company to await fauther

There was plain indications that heavy bodies of Con- But neither Jack Clark nor his brave Boys in Blue ever forgot those ticklish moments, when, far down in the

THE END.

Read "WINNING THE DAY; OR, THE BOYS IN (18) of "Blue and Gray Weekly."

SPECIAL NOTICE: All back numbers of this weekly are always in print. If you cannot obtain them from any newsdealer, send the price in money or postage stamps by mail to FRANK TOUSEY, PUBLISHER, 21 UNION SQUARE. NEW YORK, and you will receive the copies you order by return mail.

THE BEST ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY STORY PAPER PUBLISHED ISSUED EVERY FRIDAY

"HAPPY DAYS" is a large 16-page paper containing Interesting Stories, Poems, Sketches, Comic Stories, Jokes, Answers to Correspondents, and many other bright features. Its Authors and Artists have a national reputation. No amount. of money is spared to make this Werker the best published.

DUT TO-DAY!

OUT TO-DAY!

FRANCE FILE :

OR,

The Waif of the Big Blaze.

By ROBERT LENNOX.

Begins in No. 531 of "Happy Days," Issued December 2, 1904, Price 5 Cents

For sale by all Newsdealers, or will be sent to any address on receipt of price by

FRANK TOUSEY. Publisher

24 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK

THE LIBERTY BOYS OF 776.

A Weekly Magazine containing Stories of the American Revelution.

By HARRY MOORE.

These stories are based on actual facts and give a faithful account of the exciting adventures of a brave band of American youths who were always ready and willing to import their lives for the sake of helping along the gallant cause of Independence. Every number will consist of 32 large pages of reading matter, bound in a beautiful colored cover.

bound in a boautiful colored cove
LATEST ISSUES:	167 The Liberty Boys at Trenton; or, The Greatest Christmas ever
129 The Liberty Boys and Aaron Burr; or, Battling for Independ-	168 The Liberty Boys and General Gates; or, The Disaster at Cam-
130 The Liberty Boys and the "Swamp Fox"; or, Helping Marion. 131 The Langery Boys and Langer Committee C	den. 169 The I therty Beys at Brandywine; on Fighting Fiercely I., F:
132 The Liberty Boys and the King's Spy; or, Diamond Cut Dia-	TO The factor of the West
133 The Liberty Boys' Bayonet Charge; or, The Siege of Yorktown. 134 The Liberty Boys' and Paul January. The Marty of the First	Hecord. 17! The I thought Boys! Ambused Sangel on Prophilis.
Ships. 135 The Lating Regards Beeting G. v. or, Saudi'r t. Liller.
156 The Liberty Boys' "Machine Holds or The Brove Potrict Spy. 137 The Liberty Boys' "Machine Machine of the bow
l'ens. 138 The Liberty Boys and the Traitor; or, How They Handled Him.	Worried.
The Langer Bash Velowick Control of the Record	177 The Liberty Boys and Flora McDonald; or, After the Hessians.
141 The Liberty Boys in Richmond; or, Fighting Traitor Arnold. 142 The Liberty Boys and the Terrible Tory; or, Beating a Bad Man.	178 The Liberty Roys' Drum Corps; or, Fighting for the Starry Flag 179 The Liberty Boys and the Gun Maker; or, The Battle of Stony Point.
143 The Laberty Brys' Sword Fight: cr. Walling with the In . y a West pous.	181 The Liberty Boys and the Girl Spy; or, Fighting Tryon's Raiders
144 The Liberty Boys in Georgia; or, Lively Times Down South.	182 The Liberty Boys' Masked Battery: or. The Burning of Kingst
145 The Larry By and the Quaker Spy; or, Two of a Kind.	Messenger. 184 The Tiberty Boys in District 96; or, Surrounded by Redcon-
150 The Liberty Boys on Guard: or, Watching the Enemy.	186 The Liberty Boys on the Hudson; or, Working on the W
152 The Liberty Boys' Retreet: or in the Shades of Boath	Cause.
754 The Liberty Boys and H. Fire Fired, or, A New Kill of Fitter.	198 The Liberty Boys Atleat; or, Sailing With Paul Jones.
Philadelphia. 156 The Liberty Phys and the Cypnius; er, i Winderful F	190 The Liberty Boys in Mohawk Valley; or, Fighting Redcoats, To-
157 The Liberty Boys' Flying Artillery; or "Liberty or Death." 158 The Liberty Boys Against the Red Demons; or, Fighting the Indian Raiders.	191 The Liberty Boys Left Behind; or, Alone in the Enemy's Country. 192 The Liberty Boys at Augusta; or, 'Way Down in Georgia. 193 The Liberty Boys' Swamp Camp; or, Fighting and Hiding.
150 The Liberty Boys' On a recognition that the land of Modern who 160 The Liberty Boys' Date had been a few as a few his and the first fi	I to Ten Land, Property Circle Scouts on Mighting Putlants Purgers
General. 161 The Liberty Boys' Grit; or, The Bravest of the Brave.	196 The Liberty Boys' Girl Scout; or, Fighting Butler's Rangers. 197 The Liberty Boys at Budd's Crossing; or, Hot Work in Cold Weather.
162 The Liberty Boys at West Point; or, Helping to Watch the Red-	198 The Liberty Boys' Raft: or, Floating and Fighting 199 The Liberty Boys at Albany; or, Saving General Schuyler.
163 The Liberty Boys' Terrible Tussle: or, Fighting to a Finish. 164 The Liberty Boys and "Light Horse Harry"; or, Chasing the	200 The Liberty Boys' Good Fortune; or, Sent on Secret Service. 201 The Liberty Boys at Johnson's Mill; or, A Hard Grist to Grind.
British Dragoons.	202 The Liberty Boys' Warning; or, A Tip that Came in Time.
166 The Liberty P years Mate Mate, o. me to the day
	y Address on Racipa of Price, 5 Cenci per Cuty, 1s
FRANK TOUBEY, Publisher,	II. Union Square, Mew Tork.
TE TOU WANT AND	F BACK NUMBERS of our Libraria, and carrot procure them from to M. deal 12.	they can be obtained from this efficient direct. Cut out and mi
in the talowing tracer blant and S.B. it to 1.5 V. th the Lit	e of the bods you want and we will and then up bearing and an arrangement of the many that are made as more as a second of the s
•••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, New York.
DEAR SIR—Enclosed findcents for which please send me:
copies of WORK AND WIN, Nos
WILD WEST, WEEKLY, Nos.

" PLUCK AND LUCK, Nos......

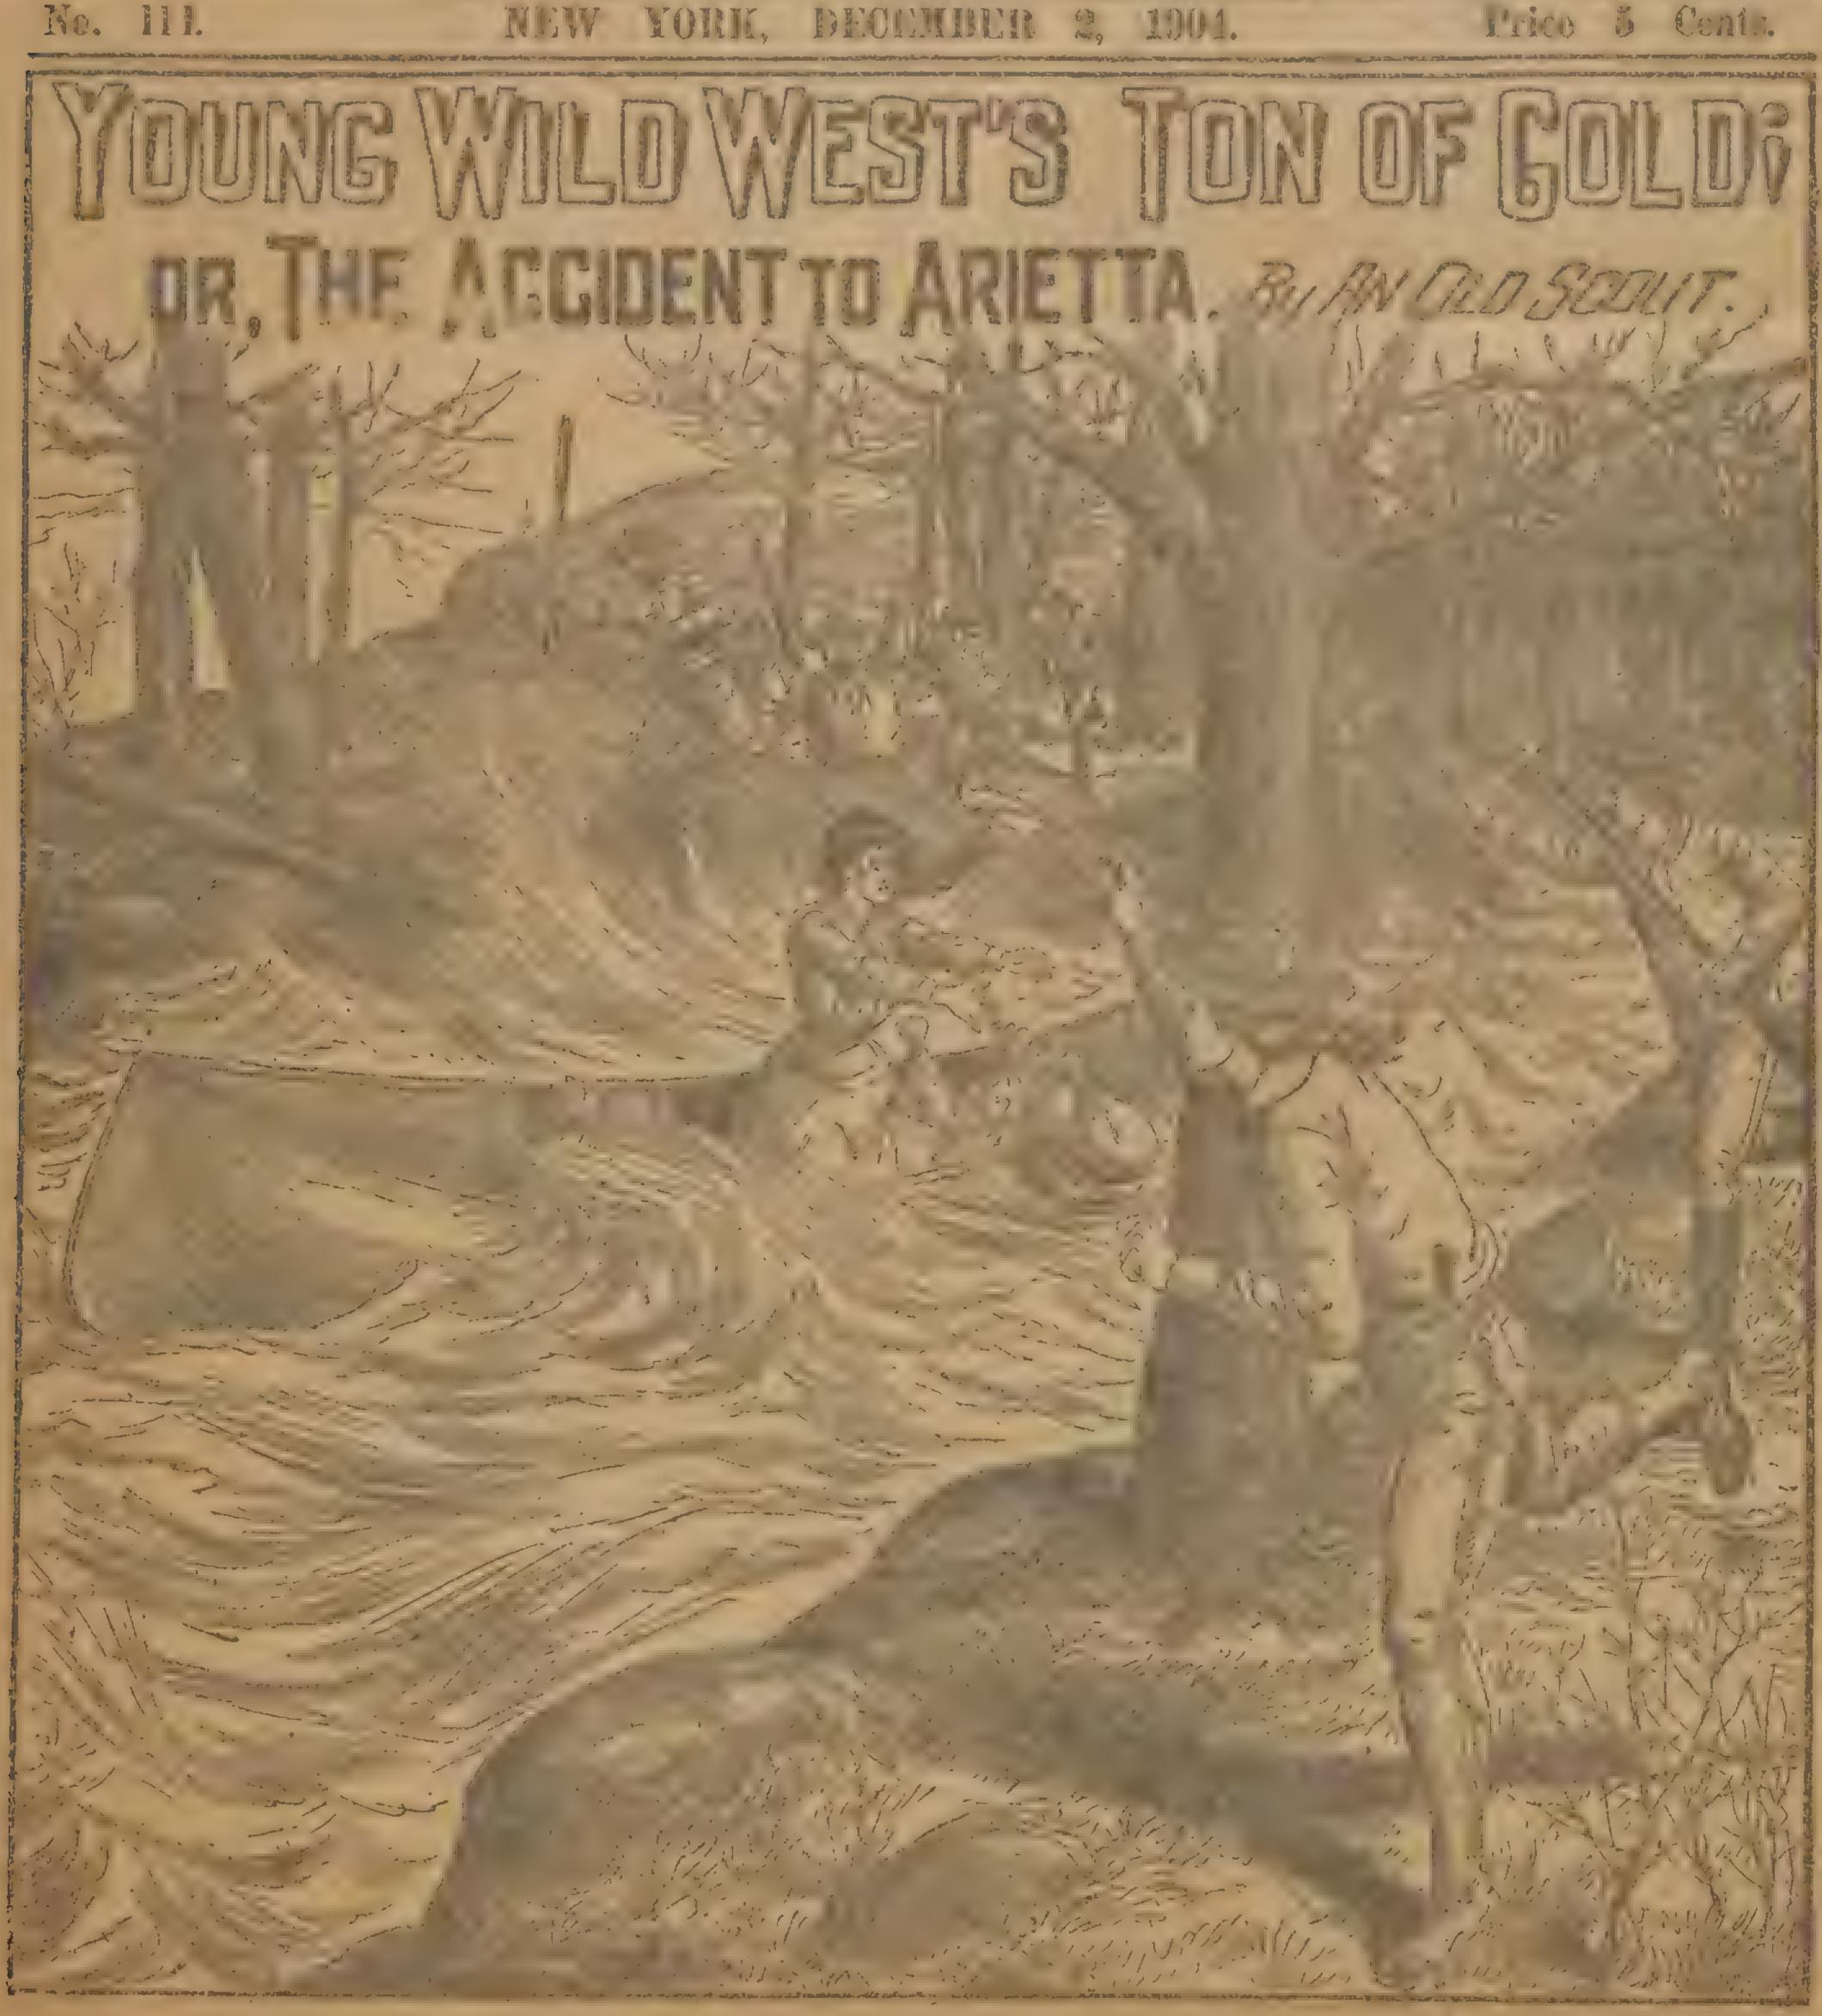

" SECRET SERVICE, No......

" THE LIBERTY BOYS OF '76, Nos.....

"Ten-Citt Harl Buiks, New.

Issued Weekly-By Subscription $2.50 per year. 'Application made for Second-Class Entry at N. Y. Post Office.

WESTWEEKLY

A Magazine Containing Stories, Sketches, etc., of Western Life.

BY AN OLD SCOUT

32 PAGES.

5 CENTS.

EACH NUMBER IN A HANDSOME COLORED COVER.

All of these exciting stories are founded on facts. Young Wild West is a hero with whom the author was acquainted. His daring deeds and thrilling adventures have never been surpassed. They form the base of the most dashing stories ever published.

Read the following numbers of this most interesting magazine and be convinced:

LATEST ISSUES:

- 56 Young Wild West and the Broken Bowie; or, The Outlaws of
- Yellow Fork. 57 Young Wild West's Running Fight; or, Trapping the Reds and
- 58 Young Wild West and His Dead Shot Band; or, the Smugglers of the Canadian Border.
- 59 Young Wild West's Blind Ride; or, The Treasure Trove of the Yellowstone.
- 60 Young Wild West and the Vigilantes; or, Thinning Out a Hard
- 61 Young Wild West on a Crimson Trail; or, Arietta Among the Apaches.
- 62 Young Wild West and "Gilt Edge Gil"; or, Touching up the
- 63 Young Wild West's Reckless Riders; or, After the Train Wreck-
- 64 Young Wild West at Keno Gulch; or, The Game That Was Never
- Played. 65 Young Wild West and the Man from the East; or, The Luck that
- Found the Lost Lode. 66 Young Wild West in the Grand Canyon; or, A Finish Fight With
- 67 Young Wild West and the "Wyoming Wolves"; or, Arietta's Won-
- derful Nerve. 68 Young Wild West's Dangerous Deal; or, The Plot to Flood a Silver
- Maine. 69 Young Wild West and the Purple Plumes; or, Cheyenne Charlie's
- Close Call. 70 Young Wild West at "Coyote Camp"; or, Spoiling a Lynching Bee.
- 71 Young Wild West the Lasso King; or, The Crooked Gang of "Straight" Ranch.
- 72 Young Wild West's Game of Chance; or, Saved by Arietta. 73 Young Wild West and "Cayuse Kitty; or, The Queen of the Bron-
- cho Busters. 74 Young Wild West's Steady Hand; or, The Shot that Made a
- Million. 75 Young Wild West and the Plute Princess; or, The Trail that Led
- to the Lost Land.
- 77 Young Wild West and the Girl in Green; or, A Lively Time at Silver Plume.
- 78 Young Wild West's Long-Range Shot; or, Arletta's Ride for Life. 79 Young Wild West and the Stranded Show; or, -Waking the Prairle
- 'Pilgrims. 80 Young Wild West's Life at Stake; or, The Strategy of Arietta.
- Golden Loop.

ON RECEIPT OF PRICE,

- 82 Young Wild West and Nevada Nan; or, The Wild Girl of the Sierras.
- 83 Young Wild West in the Bad Lands; or, Hemmed in by Redskins
- 84 Young Wild West at Nugget Flats; or, Arietta's Streak of Luck. 85 Young Wild West's Grizzly Hunt; or, The Rival Rangers of the Rockies.
- 86 Young Wild West's Buckskin Brigade; or, Helping the Cavalry-
- 87 Young Wild West at Magic Mark; or, Showing Them how to Run the Camp.
- 88 Young Wild West's Duel With Death; or. Arietta to the Rescue. 89 Young Wild West's Cowboy Band; or, The Tune they Played in
- Deadwood. 90 Young Wild West's Indian Scout; or, Arietta and the Pawnee Maiden.
- 91 Young Wild West and the "Salted" Mine; or, The Double Game for a Million.
- 92 Young Wild West's Overland Route; or, The Masked Band of Death
- 93 Young Wild West's Iron Grip; or, Settling the Cowboy Fend.
- 94 Young Wild West's Last Chance; or, Arietta's Narrow Escape. 95 Young Wild West and the Gold Grabbers; or, The Fight for the Widow's Claim.
- 96 Young Wild West and the Branded Band; or, The Scourge of Skeleton Skit.
- 97 Young Wild West's Double Danger; or, The Sign of the Secret
- 98 Young Wild West and the Renegade Rustlers; or, Saved by the Sorrel Stallion.
- 99 Young Wild West's Fandango; or, Arietta Among the Mexicans. 100 Young Wild West and the Double Deuce; or, The Domino Gang of Denver.
- 101 Young Wild West on the Prairie; or. The Trail that had no End. 102 Young Wild West and "Missouri Mike"; or, The Worst Man in Wy-
- 103 Young Wild West at the Golden Gate; or, A Business Trip to 'Frisco. 104 Young Wild West and the Redskin Raiders; or Arietta's Leap for Life,
- 105 Young Wild West's Cowboy Circus; or, Fun at the Mining Camps. 76 Young Wild West's Cowboy Carnival; or, The Roundup at Roar- 106 Young Wild West at Pike's Peak; or, Arietta's Strange Disappearance
 - 107 Young Wild West's Six Shots, and the Change they Made at Dead Man's Mark.
 - 108 Young Wild West at the Little Big Horn; or, The Last Stand of the Cavalry. 109 Young Wild West's Big Bluff; or, Playing a Lone Hand.
 - 110 Young Wild West at Bowie Bend; or, The Ban of the Bandit Band. 111 Young Wild West's Ton of Gold; or, The Accident to Arietta.

CENTS PER COPY, BY

81 Young Wild West's Prairie Pioneers; or, Fighting the Way to the 112 Young Wild West's Green Corn Dance; or, A Lively Time with the Pawnees. WILL BE SENT TO ANY ADDRESS BY ALL NEWSDEALERS. FOR SALE

5

FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher,

24 Union Square, New York.

IF YOU WANT ANY BACK NUMBERS

of our Libraries and cannot procure them from newsdealers, they can be obtained from this office direct. Cut out and fill in the following Order Blank and send it to us with the price of the books you want and we will send them to you by re-POSTAGE STAMPS TAKEN THE SAME AS MONEY. turn mail.

FRAN	VK !	го	USEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, New York.
			R SIR—Enclosed findcents for which please send me:
c	opies	of	WORK AND WIN, Nos
			WILD WEST WEEKLY, Nos
	66	46	BLUE AND GRAY WEEKLY, Nos
	66	"	FRANK READE WEEKLY MAGAZINE, Nos
			PLUCK AND LUCK, Nos
			SECRET SERVICE, Nos
			THE LIBERTY BOYS OF '76, Nos
			Ten-Cent Hand Books, Nos.

I I C K I U C K A N D CONTAINS ALL SORTS OF STORIES. EVERY STORY 32 PAGES. BEAUTIFULLY COLORED COVERS. PRICE 5 CENTS. LATEST ISSUES: 1303 Old Putnam's Pet; or, The Young Patriot Spy. A Story of the Revolution. By Gen. Jas. A. Gordon. 267 The Rival Base Ball Clubs; or, The Champions of Columbia 304 The Boy Speculators of Brookton; or, Millionaires at Nineteen. Academy. By Allyn Draper. By Allyn Draper. 268 The Boy Cattle King; or, Frank Fordham's Wild West Ranch. 305 Rob Rudder, the Boy Pilot of the Mississippi. By Howard Austin. By an Old Scout. 306 The Downward Path; or, The Road to Ruin. A True Temperance 269 Wide Awake Will, The Plucky Boy Fireman of No. 3; or, Fight-Story. By H. K. Shackleford. ing the Flames for Fame and Fortune. By ex-Fire Chief War-307 Up From the Ranks; or, From Corporal to General. A Story of the Great Rebellion. By Gen'l Jas. A. Gordon. 270 Jack Wright and His Electric Tricycle; or, Fighting the Stran-308 Expelled From School; or, The Rebels of Beechdale Academy. glers of the Crimson Desert. By "Noname." By Allyn Draper. 271 The Orphans of New York. A Pathetic Story of a Great City. 309 Larry, the Life Saver; or, A Born Fireman. By Ex-Fire Chief By N. S. Wood (the Young American Actor). 272 Sitting Bull's Last Shot : or, The Vengeance of an Indian Police-310 The Brand of Siberia; or, The Boy Tracker of the Steppes. By man. By Pawnee Bill. Allan Arnold. 273 The Haunted House on the Harlem; or, The Mystery of a Miss-311 Across the Continent with a Circus; or, The Twin Riders of the ing Man .. By Howard Austin. 274 Jack Wright and His Ocean Plunger; or, The Harpoon Hunters Ring. By Berton Bertrew. 312 On Board a Man-of-War; or, Jack Farragut in the U.S. Navy. of the Arctic. By "Noname." 275 Claim 33; or, The Boys of the Mountain. By Jas. C. Merritt. By Capt. Thos. H. Wilson. 276 The Road to Ruin; or, The Snares and Temptations of New 313 Nick and Jed, the King Trappers of the Border. By An Old York. By Jno. B. Dowd. 277 A Spy at 16; or, Fighting for Washington and Liberty. By 314 Red Light Dick, The Engineer Prince; or, The Bravest Boy on Gen'l Jas. A. Gordon. the Railroad. By Jas. C. Merritt. 278 Jack Wright's Flying Torpedo; or, The Black Demons of Dismal 315 Leadville Jack, the Game Cock of the West. By An Old Scout. Swamp. By "Noname." 316 Adrift in the Sea of Grass: or, The Strange Voyage of a Missing 279 High Ladder Harry, The Young Fireman of Freeport; or, Al-Ship. By Capt. Thos. H. Wilson. ways at the Top. By Ex-Fire Chief Warden. 317 Out of the Gutter; or, Fighting the Battle Alone. A True Tem-280 100 Chests of Gold; or, The Aztecs' Buried Secret. By Richard perance Story. By H. K. Shackleford. R. Montgomery. 318 The Scouts of the Santee; or, Redcoats and Whigs. A Story of 281 Pat Malloy; or, An Irish Boy's Pluck and Luck. By Allyn the American Revolution. By Gen'l Jas. A. Gordon. Draper. 319 Edwin Forrest's Boy Pupil; or, The Struggles and Triumphs of 282 Jack Wright and His Electric Sea Ghost; or, A Strange Under a Boy Actor. By N. S. Wood, the Young American Actor. Water Journey. By "Noname." 283 Sixty Mile Sam; or, Bound to be on Time. By Jas. C. Merritt. 320 Air Line Will, The Young Engineer of the New Mexico Express. By Jas. C. Merritt. 284 83 Degrees North Latitude; or, the Handwriting in the Iceberg. 321 The Richest Boy in Arizona; or, The Mystery of the Gila. By By Howard Austin. Howard Austin. 285 Joe, The Actor's Boy; or, Famous at Fourteen. By N. S. Wood (the Young American Actor.) 322 Twenty Degrees Beyond the Arctic Circle; or, Deserted in the 286 Dead For 5 Years; or, The Mystery of a Madhouse. By Allyn Land of Ice. By Berton Bertrew. 323 Young King Kerry, the Irish Rob Roy; or, The Lost Lilly of 287 Broker Bob; or, The Youngest Operator in Wall Street. By Killarney. By Allyn Draper. 324 Canoe Carl; or, A College Boy's Cruise in the Far North. By Al-H. K. Shackleford. 288 Boy Pards; or, Making a Home on the Border. By An Old lan Arnold. Scout. 325 Randy Rollins, the Boy Fireman. A Story of Heroic Deeds. By 289 The Twenty Doctors; or, the Mystery of the Coast. By Capt. Ex-Fire-Chief Warden. Thos. H. Wilson. 326 Green Mountain Joe, the Old Trapper of Malbro Pond. By An 200 The Boy Cavalry Scout; or, Life in the Saddle. By Gen'l. Jas. Old Scout. A. Gordon. 327 The Prince of Rockdale School; or, A Fight for a Railroad. By 291 The Boy Firemen; or, "Stand by the Machine." By Ex-Fire Chief Howard Austin. 328 Lost in the City; or, The Lights and Shadows of New York. By Warden. 292 Rob, the Runaway; or, From Office Boy to Partner. By Allyn H. K. Shackleford. 329 Switchback Sam, the Young Pennsylvania Engineer; or, Rail-Draper. 293 The Shattered Glass; or, A Country Boy in New York roading in the Oil Country. By Jas. C. Merritt. 330 Trapeze Tom, the Boy Acrobat; or, Daring Work in the Air. By-Temperance Story. By Jno. B. Dowd. 294 Lightning Lew, the Boy Scout; or, Perils in the West. By Gen'l. Berton Bertrew. Jas. A. Gordon. 331 Yellowstone Kelly. A Story of Adventures in the Great West. By An 295 The Gray House on the Rock; or, The Ghosts of Ballentyne Hall. Old Scout. 332 The Poisoned Wine; or, Foiling a Desperate Game. A True Temper-By Jas. C. Merritt. 296 A Poor Boy's Fight; or, The Hero of the School. By Howard ance Story. By H. K. Shackleford. 333 Shiloh Sam; or, General Grant's Best Boy Scout. By Gen'l Jas. A. Austin. 297 Captain Jack Tempest; or, The Prince of the Sea. By Capt. Thos. 334 Alone in New York; or, RaggediRob the Newsboy. By N. S. Wood, the H. Wilson. Young American Actor. 298 Billy Button, the Young Clown and Bareback Rider. By Berton 335 The Floating Treasure; or, The Secret of the Pirates' Rock. By Capt. Thos. H. Wilson. 299 An Engineer at 16; or, The Prince of the Lightning Express. By 336 Tom Throttle, The Boy Engineer of the Midnight Express; or, Rail-Jas. C. Merritt. roading in Central America. By Jas. C. Merritt. 300 To the North Pole in a Balloon. By Berton Betrew. 301 Kit Carson's Little Scout; or, The Renegade's Doom. By An Old 337 The Diamond Eye; or, The Secret of the Idol. By Richard R. Montgomery. 302 From the Street; or, The Fortunes of a Bootblack. By N. S. Wood 338 Ned North, The Young Arctic Explorer; or, The Phantom Valley of the North Pole. By Berton Bertrew. the Young American Actor). For Sale by All Newsdealers, or will be Sent to Any Address on Receipt of Price, 5 Cents per Copy, by 24 Union Square, New York. FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher. IF YOU WANT ANY BACK NUMBERS POSTAGE STAMPS TAKEN THE SAME AS MONEY. turn mail.

of our Libraries and cannot procure them from newsdealers, they can be obtained from this office direct. Cut out and fill in the following Order Blank and send it to us with the price of the books you want and we will send them to you by re-

FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, New York.
FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, 11cm 1011.
DEAR SIR—Enclosed findcents for which please send me:
copies of WORK AND WIN, Nos
" " WILD WEST WEEKLY, Nos
" " BLUE AND GRAY WEEKLY, Nos
" " FRANK READE WEEKLY MAGAZINE, Nos
" " PLUCK AND LUCK, Nos
" SECRET SERVICE, Nos
" "THE LIBERTY BOYS OF '76, Nos
" Ten-Cent Hand Books, Nos
Name

THE STAGE.

No. 41. THE BOYS OF NEW YORK END MEN'S JOKE BOOK .- Containing a great variety of the latest jokes used by the most famous end men. No amateur minstrels is complete without this wonderful little book.

No. 42. THE BOYS OF NEW YORK STUMP SPEAKER .-Containing a varied assortment of stump speeches, Negro, Dutch and Irish. Also end men's jokes. Just the thing for home amusement and amateur shows.

No. 45. THE BOYS OF NEW YORK MINSTREL GUIDE AND JOKE BOOK .- Something new and very instructive. Every boy should obtain this book, as it contains full instructions for organizing an amateur minstrel troupe.

No. 65. MULDOON'S JOKES .- This is one of the most original joke books ever published, and it is brimful of wit and humor. It contains a large collection of songs, jokes, conundrums, etc., of Terrence Muldoon, the great wit, humorist, and practical joker of the day. Every boy who can enjoy a good substantial joke should obtain a copy immediately.

No. 79. HOW TO BECOME AN ACTOR.—Containing complete instructions how to make up for various characters on the stage; together with the duties of the Stage Manager, Prompter, Scenic Artist and Property Man. By a prominent Stage Manager.

No. 80. GUS WILLIAMS' JOKE BOOK .- Containing the latest jokes, anecdotes and funny stories of this world-renowned and ever popular German comedian. Sixty-four pages; handsome colored cover containing a half-tone photo of the author.

HOUSEKEEPING.

No. 16. HOW TO KEEP A WINDOW GARDEN.—Containing full instructions for constructing a window garden either in town or country, and the most approved methods for raising beautiful flowers at home. The most complete book of the kind ever published.

No. 30. HOW TO COOK.—One of the most instructive books on cooking ever published. It contains recipes for cooking meats, fish, game, and oysters; also pies, puddings, cakes and all kinds of pastry, and a grand collection of recipes by one of our most popular cooks.

No. 37. HOW TO KEEP HOUSE.—It contains information for everybody, boys, girls, men and women; it will teach you how to make almost anything around the house, such as parlor ornaments, brackets, cements, Aeolian harps, and bird lime for catching birds.

ELECTRICAL.

No. 46. HOW TO MAKE AND USE ELECTRICITY.-A description of the wonderful uses of electricity and electro magnetism; together with full instructions for making Electric Toys, Batteries, etc. By George Trebel, A. M., M. D. Containing over fifty iljustrations.

No. 64. HOW TO MAKE ELECTRICAL MACHINES.-Containing full directions for making electrical machines, induction coils, dynamos, and many novel toys to be worked by electricity.

By R. A. R. Bennett. Fully illustrated.

No. 67. HOW TO DO ELECTRICAL TRICKS.—Containing a large collection of instructive and highly amusing electrical tricks, together with illustrations. By A. Anderson.

ENTERTAINMENT.

No. 9. HOW TO BECOME A VENTRILOQUIST .- By Harry Kennedy. The secret given away. Every intelligent boy reading this book of instructions, by a practical professor (delighting muititudes every night with his wonderful imitations), can master the art, and create any amount of fun for himself and friends. It is the greatest book ever published, and there's millions (of fun) in it.

No. 20. HOW TO ENTERTAIN AN EVENING PARTY.-A very valuable little book just published. A complete compendium of games, sports, card diversions, comic recitations, etc., suitable for parlor or drawing-room entertainment. It contains more for the money than any book published.

No. 35. HOW TO PLAY GAMES.—A complete and useful little book, containing the rules and regulations of billiards, bagatelle, backgammon, croquet, dominoes, etc.

No. 36. HOW TO SOLVE CONUNDRUMS.—Containing all the leading conundrums of the day, amusing riddles, curious catches and witty sayings.

No. 52. HOW TO PLAY CARDS.—A complete and handy little book, giving the rules and full directions for playing Euchre, Cribbage. Casino, Forty-Five, Rounce, Pedro Sancho, Draw Poker, Auction Pitch. All Fours, and many other popular games of cards.

No. 66. HOW TO DO PUZZLES .- Containing over three hundred interesting puzzles and conundrums, with key to same. A complete book. Fully illustrated. By A. Anderson.

ETIQUETTE.

No. 13. HOW TO DO IT; OR, BOOK OF ETIQUETTE.-It is a great life secret, and one that every young man desires to know all about. There's happiness in it.

No. 33. HOW TO BEHAVE.—Containing the rules and etiquette of good society and the easiest and most approved methods of appearing to good advantage at parties, balls, the theatre, church, and in the drawing-room.

DECLAMATION.

No. 27. HOW TO RECITE AND BOOK OF RECITATIONS. _Containing the most popular selections in use, comprising Dutch dialect, French dialect, Yankee and Irish dialect pieces, together piled and written by Lu Senarens, author of "How to Become a with many standard readings.

No. 31. HOW TO BECOME A SPEAKER.—Containing fourteen illustrations, giving the different positions requisite to become a good speaker, reader and elocutionist. Also containing gems from all the popular authors of prose and poetry, arranged in the most simple and concise manner possible.

No. 49. HOW TO DEBATE.—Giving rules for conducting debates, outlines for debates, questions for discussion, and the best sources for procuring information on the questions given.

SOCIETY,

No. 3. HOW TO FLIRT.—The arts and wiles of flirtation are fully explained by this little book. Besides the various methods of handkerchief, fan, glove, parasol, window and hat flirtation, it contains a full list of the language and sentiment of flowers, which is interesting to everybody, both old and young. You cannot be happy without one.

No. 4. HOW TO DANCE is the title of a new and handsome little book just issued by Frank Tousey. It contains full instructions in the art of dancing, etiquette in the ball-room and at parties, how to dress, and full directions for calling off in all popular square dances.

No. 5. HOW TO MAKE LOVE.—A complete guide to love, courtship and marriage, giving sensible advice, rules and etiquette to be observed, with many curious and interesting things not generally known.

No. 17. HOW TO DRESS.—Containing full instruction in the art of dressing and appearing well at home and abroad, giving the selections of colors, material, and how to have them made up.

No. 18. HOW TO BECOME BEAUTIFUL .- One of the brightest and most valuable little books ever given to the world. Everybody wishes to know how to become beautiful, both male and female. The secret is simple, and almost costless. Read this book and be convinced how to become beautiful.

BIRDS AND ANIMALS.

No. 7. HOW TO KEEP BIRDS.—Handsomely illustrated and containing full instructions for the management and training of the canary, mockingbird, bobolink, blackbird, paroquet, parrot, etc.

No. 39. HOW TO RAISE DOGS, POULTRY, PIGEONS AND RABBITS.—A useful and instructive book. Handsomely illustrated. By Ira Drofraw.

No. 40. HOW TO MAKE AND SET TRAPS.—Including hints on how to catch moles, weasels, otter, rats, squirrels and birds. Also how to cure skins. Copiously illustrated. By J. Harrington Keene.

No. 50. HOW TO STUFF BIRDS AND ANIMALS .- A valuable book, giving instructions in collecting, preparing, mounting and preserving birds, animals and insects.

No. 54. HOW TO KEEP AND MANAGE PETS.—Giving complete information as to the manner and method of raising, keeping, taming, breeding, and managing all kinds of pets; also giving full instructions for making cages, etc. Fully explained by twenty-eight illustrations, making it the most complete book of the kind ever published.

MISCELLANEOUS.

No. 8. HOW TO BECOME A SCIENTIST .- A useful and instructive book, giving a complete treatise on chemistry; also experiments in acoustics, mechanics, mathematics, chemistry, and directions for making fireworks, colored fires, and gas balloons. This book cannot be equaled.

No. 14. HOW TO MAKE CANDY.—A complete hand-book for making all kinds of candy, ice-cream, syrups, essences, etc., etc. No. 19.—FRANK TOUSEY'S UNITED STATES DISTANCE TABLES, POCKET COMPANION AND GUIDE.—Giving the official distances on all the railroads of the United States and Canada. Also table of distances by water to foreign ports, hack fares in the principal cities, reports of the census, etc., etc., making it one of the most complete and handy books published

No. 38. HOW TO BECOME YOUR OWN DOCTOR.—A wonderful book, containing useful and practical information in the treatment of ordinary diseases and ailments common to every family. Abounding in useful and effective recipes for general complaints.

No. 55. HOW TO COLLECT STAMPS AND COINS.—Containing valuable information regarding the collecting and arranging of stamps and coins. Handsomely illustrated.

No. 58. HOW TO BE A DETECTIVE.—By Old King Brady. the world-known detective. In which he lays down some valuable and sensible rules for beginners, and also relates some adventures and experiences of well-known detectives. No. 60. HOW TO BECOME A PHOTOGRAPHER.—Containing useful information regarding the Camera and how to work it: also how to make Photographic Magic Lantern Slides and other

Transparencies. Handsomely illustrated. By Captain W. De W. Abney. No. 62. HOW TO BECOME A WEST POINT MILITARY

CADET .- Containing full explanations how to gain admittance, course of Study, Examinations, Duties, Staff of Officers, Post Guard, Police Regulations, Fire Department, and all a boy should know to be a Cadet. Compiled and written by Lu Senarens, author of "How to Become a Naval Cadet."

No. 63. HOW TO BECOME A NAVAL CADET.—Complete instructions of how to gain admission to the Annapolis Naval Academy. Also containing the course of instruction, description of grounds and buildings, historical sketch, and everything a boy should know to become an officer in the United States Navy. Com-

West Point Military Cadet."

PRICE 10 CENTS EACH, OR 3 FOR 25 CENTS. Address FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, New York.

A Grand War Library

BLUE AND GRAY WEEKLY

STORIES OF BRAVE NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN BOYS IN THE CIVIL WAR

By Lieutenant Harry Lee

Each Number Complete A 32=Page Book For 5 Cents!

DO NOT FAIL TO BUY A COPY

A New Story Will be Published Every Week

All of these stirring stories are based on historical facts. They relate the exciting adventures of two gallant young officers in the rebellion. Each alternate story deals with the North and South. There is absolutely no partisanship shown. In one story the exploits of Captain Jack Clark, of the Fairdale Blues, is given. In the next, Captain Will Prentiss figures with his company, the Virginia Grays. Thus, both sides of the war are shown in the most impartial manner. You will like the stories of the South as well as you will like those of the North. Both are replete with daring incidents, great battles and thrilling military situations. An interesting love theme runs through each story. Read the following numbers:

ALREADY PUBLISHED:

- 1 Off to the War; or, The Boys in Blue Mustered In.
- 2 At the Front; or, The Boys in Gray in Battle.
- 3 Holding the Line; or, The Boys in Blue's Great Defence.
- 4 On a Forced March; or, The Boys in Gray to the Rescue.
- 5 Through the Lines; or, The Boys in Blue on a Raid.
- 6 Prisoners of War; or, The Boys in Gray in Limbo.
- 7 On Special Service; or, The Boys in Blue in Danger.
- 8 Bivouac and Battle; or, The Boys in Gray's Hard Campaign.
- 9 Out with Grant; or, The Boys in Blue in Tennessee.
- 10 At Fair Oaks; or, The Boys in Gray Winning Out.
- 11 Hemmed In; or, The Boys in Blue's Hard Fight.
- 12 Trapped by a Traitor; or, The Boys in Gray in a Scrape.

- 13 At Fort Donelson; or, The Boys in Blue's Great Charge.
- 14 Held at Bay; or, The Boys in Gray Baffled.
- 15 At Pittsburg Landing; or, The Boys in Blue's Greatest Battle.
- 16 Leading the Line; or, The Boys in Gray's Best Work.
- 17 Between Two Fires; or, The Boys in Blue Cut off.
- 18 Winning the Day; or, The Boys in Gray in the Lead.

For Sale by All Newsdealers, or will be Sent to Any Address on Receipt of Price, 5 Cents per Copy, by

FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher,

24 Union Square, New York.

IF YOU WANT ANY BACK NUMBERS

of our Libraries and cannot procure them from newsdealers, they can be obtained from this office direct. Cut out and fill in the following Order Blank and send it to us with the price of the books you want and we will send them to you by return mail.

POSTAGE STAMPS TAKEN THE SAME AS MONEY.

FRANK TOUSEY, Publisher, 24 Union Square, New York.
DEAR SIR—Enclosed findcents for which please send me:
copies of WORK AND WIN, Nos
" WILD WEST WEEKLY, Nos
" "BLUE AND GRAY WEEKLY, Nos
" PLUCK AND LUCK, Nos
" SECRET SERVICE, Nos
" "THE LIBERTY BOYS OF '76, Nos
" Ten-Cent Hand Books, Nos
Name	wnState